Thread: Rough or Smooth mouse pad?

Zherk - June 5, 2017, 12:11 pm
I'm finally getting the setup I've been envisioning piece by piece, and wanted to know what kind of extended mouse pad texture you guys prefer. I plan on getting one custom made so I kind of don't wanna go wrong with it. Thanks in advance!

Get one that best suites your mouse. Opticals like smooth, while laser like rough textures.
Do some research before buying! I prefer optical bc faster reaction times but that's just my preference

Gell mouspads are the best.

I use a steelseries qck (Cloth~)

I had a hard mousepad before and after I switched to a soft I can never see myself go back

If you're into gaming, a smooth surface is what you're probably going to prefer. If it's just general use, a textures one may be better and may last longer.

When I was gaming a lot, the best mouse mat I used was:

Steelseries 5L - it has five layers, so it had a very slight texture, but the mouse would glide across it like it had no friction what-so-ever.

I would always get into rough ones, or ones in between.

Smooth is ehhhhhh

Semi-smooth? This corsair pad (drops down to $14.99 sometimes).

Not sure if you call a woven pad rough or not.

I personally use razer goliathus control, It has a cloth texture and works very well with my razer naga.

I personally use the Ducky Flipper EXTRA mouse pad. Its a extended mouse pad and in my opinion doesn't feel rough, its more on the smoother side.

I got corsair MM800 Polaris, it's quite a rough scratchy texture but the movement is so fluent with the mouse, it works incredibly well together.
Better than fabric mousepads I've had
