Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Gamingfoc.us | Gaming & General Discussion

Kaz'jin - February 27, 2018, 3:45 am

Hello,
Gamingfoc.us is a new community board for those of you whom love to game as much as you love to discuss other topics as well. We cover a variety of topics such as general discussions, entertainment, gaming on different platforms and we are planning to add more categories to post in as the community grows.

See you over there!

PS:
I am looking for new additions to the staff team. I am mainly looking for advertisers and community managers (moderators).

LongJ - February 27, 2018, 4:08 am
I feel with the name "GamingFocus" you should focus on getting people involved in the Gaming section before trying to promote general discussions. You could cut down to just a "off topic" category, I think most people are going to come to your forum for gaming, so the off-topic forum will just be an added benefit.

When I first landed on your website I was really confused. All I seen was Announcements, Support, and feedback. The category tabs don't look like tabs and are a bit transparent so it took me a minute to realize there were tabs there. You could have people land on your gaming tab and get rid of the Main tab. By doing so you could add a "GamingFocus News & Announcements" forum in the category, while support and feedback could be subforums in it. Then after that will be all the gaming forums and you'll have the feel that you're landing on a gaming forum. Also category tabs look really cool but they are kind of pointless until you have tons of subforums, and it's best to start out with minimal tabs until you've grown.

Overall I think the simplistic design is pretty cool. You should get some content flowing through the forum so members will have conversations to join into. Good luck on the forum!

Kaz'jin - February 27, 2018, 4:21 am
(Feb 27, 2018 05:08 AM)LongJ Wrote: [CITE] I feel with the name "GamingFocus" you should focus on getting people involved in the Gaming section before trying to promote general discussions. You could cut down to just a "off topic" category, I think most people are going to come to your forum for gaming, so the off-topic forum will just be an added benefit.

When I first landed on your website I was really confused. All I seen was Announcements, Support, and feedback. The category tabs don't look like tabs and are a bit transparent so it took me a minute to realize there were tabs there. You could have people land on your gaming tab and get rid of the Main tab. By doing so you could add a "GamingFocus News & Announcements" forum in the category, while support and feedback could be subforums in it. Then after that will be all the gaming forums and you'll have the feel that you're landing on a gaming forum. Also category tabs look really cool but they are kind of pointless until you have tons of subforums, and it's best to start out with minimal tabs until you've grown.

Overall I think the simplistic design is pretty cool. You should get some content flowing through the forum so members will have conversations to join into. Good luck on the forum!
Hello LongJ,

thank you for the feedback you provided. I've taken the confusion issue into account and added and All tab to which guest will see at first sight which includes all categories. Would you like to take as second look at provide me with more feedback through a PM?

Kaz'jin - March 2, 2018, 2:46 am

Got a couple of users that registered and some activity. Join us now and be a part of the community!