What was your very first gaming console?

Being a 90s kid, for me it was the: Sega Genesis (Mega Drive). Sometimes I still miss playing on it.

Lol that was my first one too I believe. I think I had the Sonic the Hedgehog game and I would play that shit none stop. Then I moved on to Nintendo 64 and I played madden 64, Starfox, Super Smash, Mario Cart, GoldenEye, and a couple of other ones. Those were the days lol.

When I think of the Sega Genesis, the image of Sonic immediately pops into my head. I lost countless hours of playing this game and now when I think about it I never finished it? The farthest I've reached was some ice/winter level I think? There were some other games like a casino one which I also played a lot and learned how to play many games like roulette and stuff? There was also one game with Michael Jackson on it lmao.

Mario Cart is a classic on the Nintendo! Zelda and Duck Hunt too lol.

? Yeah, I never finished it either. Damn that game was so frustrating lol. I remember getting trapped in one of those big circles that you would have to run around to get those golden rings ? lol.

I forgot about Zelda and duck hunt. I wasted so many hours on them too ? Have you ever gone back and looked at the graphics on those old games. Man, they were so bad ? They were great at that time tho.

The first gaming console I ever owned was a Playstation 2 that I got for Christmas when I was six. I did, however, play the Nintendo 64 and the SNES over at my cousin's house a lot as a little kid.

I got a Gameboy Advance XP (SP?) on Christmas when I was 5 years old with Pokemon Ruby. Played that game like 300 hours as I did not understand the English at all. But did catch all legendaries before I understood anything about the game, which I am quite proud of.

I've never played ninja turtles tho, but Tony Hawk's Pro Skater series...simply amazing. We played this game so much with my friends.
When it comes to Minecraft, for the first time I played it on my PC and those were the times I enjoyed it the most (before it went mainstream).

When I was around your age I did not understand a thing too and still played. I learned English thanks to video games btw. Nice that you still have and it still functions. My first PlayStation was the PS2 and when I think about it, I never had any issues with it. One day I just put it back in its original box and it's still here. Makes me grab it now and play some Tony Hawk Pro Skater on it lol. I have the Spyro triology too! What a classic!

PlayStation 1 was my first, it was incredible. Crash Bandicoot, Oddworld: Abe's Oddysee, Tony Hawk's Pro Skater, Spyro: Year of the Dragon, Croc: Legend of the Gobbos, Tomb Raider 2, Crash Team Racing, Disney's Hercules.

Rayman was the shiiiiit yo

This actually gave me the idea to play some old af games on emulator. Never tried it before.

So many good memories right? Crash, Rayman, Spyro and Tony Hawk's Pro Skater... oh man I miss those times

My favorite game was Surf's up!
I still have the disc, but it's corrupted i think, its very scratched on the back, I can get to the title screen but beside that I cant do anything else :(
It was fun while it lasted though.

Apparently we also had a disc for Skyrim, but I was never able to make it work.

Mine was also the Sega, I'm a bit younger but when I was a kid I remember my aunt giving me hers when she moved out. I absolutely loved that thing, I wish I still had it today.

Oh damn, the first time I played Skyrim was probably around 2012 or 2013 on my PC, never played it on console. Still one of my alltime favorite games.

The Sega brings back so many good memories from my childhood... Mine is still here but I'm not sure if it works at all. Back in the day it was my most precious possession ?

I just recently saw a picture of some old Sega games, sent me on a trip remembering all the great times as a kid spending hours on it. I know exactly what you mean lmao.

Commodore 64 and then the spectrum 128k, it is good to see how things have moved since then.
I used to love the sound when you loaded your cassette tape.

Wow you're the first one to mention the ZX Spectrum. Never had the chance to play on one, the only time I've seen it was in the video games museum in Berlin.

The spectrum 128k was a beautiful console for its day, sometimes it took hours to manually input a game from a game code book, what is a good thing because one mistake and it wouldnt run, so in effect it would make you look and and check the code more than once.

Wow that's crazy. I just watched a video on YT about the Sinclair ZX Basic, that's actually interesting af lol. I imagine back then this was the first introduction to programming for some people.

iNviZ - March 13, 2021, 11:55 am

The original Nintendo. Was bad ass, I loved duck hunt and Mario.

Maskin - March 13, 2021, 11:57 am

N64 and then PS1 but I was mostly a sucker for gameboy and pokemon games.

First time I played duck hunt was on my best friend's Nintendo. They way this guy abused his console was crazy lmao. We also played River City Ransom which was another great game. Afterwards I got my own Nintendo and promised myself I'd never smash the joystick on the ground like my friend did?

Yup GameBoy... the console I never got from my parents because I was a bad kid who sprayed graffiti all over the neighborhood? Luckily my cousin had one so I played lots on his console.

Yes I fully agree there, it was my first introduction to programming and code, when you think about it is just to easy now, you put your CD in and play and job done, you are not learning nothing are you, most might just want that easy path but where is the education in that.

Yeah I had gameboy on my wish list for quite a while before I got it. A funny twist to this is that I had a tetris game and MY MOM got addicted to that shit lol. I'd just play on my PS1 when she took my gameboy ?

That's so true. Now you get everything ready to use, but in the past there was always this learning curve that you needed to go through in order to set up everything properly and understand how it works. That's how I liked it as well. Even setting up an internet connection for the first time took some time and education (and that's why I was literally the only kid with internet among my friends back then). Afterwards everything became easier and mainstream.

Lmao for me it was the opposite, my mom was against any consoles and games but my father was a huge gamer so when I got my PS as a gift, he spent more time on it at first than me xD
