I suggest looking into Exchange-Traded Funds, ETF's come with a broad range of stocks.
I'm in Australia and use CMC Markets, brokerage fee's are $0 for your first trade of the day that's under $1000. This is a good deal if your planning to dollar cost average for the long term.

It all depends on the type of trading you want to do. Day trading? Swing trading? Long term investing?
Lots of information is on Youtube already if you search for it.

If you are trying to more actively control your investments you'd really need to learn fundamental and technical analysis, so you can do proper due diligence and invest knowledgeably.

The easiest way would be to invest in ETFs like Vanguard where smarter people manage and invest your money for you.
