Thread: Anyone else dealing with forgotten passwords?

It goes something like this

TooBurnt - July 20, 2024, 7:19 am
It’s 2024 you would think we would be able to use biometrics or something…

It's time to jump on a password manager. Best decision of my life.

Bitwarden is either open-source or very often audited by security analysts etc and is the best I've seen recommended, especially over LastPass or 1Password.

And it's only $10/year.

Portugals - July 20, 2024, 10:42 am
Yes, this is very annoying and there is nothing to do :D

Oh, i always forget my passwords , not the important ones tho just the regular accounts I often use.

Prawnster - July 20, 2024, 11:24 am
Forgetting passwords is a thing of the past for me, if I can't login to a site, I just give up and forget the site exists because it's easier than going thru the rest process on some of these sites hahaha.

I have always been extremely skeptical and I have yet to jump on one ?

They make life easier tbh, also means u get to use a completely random password per site AND you only have to remember 1 password (the master password) for the manager so yeah why not jump on it :D

I probably should!

I'm sure most of us have been there at some point in the past, but nah I've been very well on top of all of my accounts/passwords for a long time now. Never something I want to have to sweat or deal with issues for.

People know their own password by heart? Insanity

Some of my random ass character passwords I do actually remember. Not my HF one as I don't ever need to use it. Runescape for instance though I'd have to always enter when I logged in which was of course a lot and so naturally that random password is now engrained in my brain haha. 99% of my passwords though are saved is all.

Yeah all of my passwords are the kind that the average person would think you're crazy and or weird asf for having lmao. That's called good security though. Granted having a good password is also only part of the battle. Ultimately doesn't mean shit if you allow yourself to be compromised for instance.

I'd be curious to know how many people on here use a password manager and or what other ways they go about storing / using their passwords.

Am I the only one who writes down login and PW info and stores them on a sheet of paper in a safe?

Can't be hacked/stolen/exposed/seen/…etc

Call me old fashioned I guess ????

It really sucks sometimes going through all the notebooks because I'm not sure where I wrote down the info.

I categorized it. Bills, emails, online shopping…trans porn sites. Etc…

Work well.

That's classified information.

Something like 5 pages of United States printer paper (8.5 x 11 in) with size 12 text.

Nah, there are 100% some others that write or type their passwords and have them on an external document. Some probably even storing them the way you do as well.

A good password manager like 1password is the way to go. Make sure your master password is strong and don't use it anywhere else.

Zher0 - July 21, 2024, 12:30 pm
Password managers are a must in this day and age. Keepass if you want to manage your own database, and Bitwarden if you don't.

Heavy vouch, its the only password manager I use. Very useful when it comes to desktop/mobile hand offs. Has the ability to auto-fill if you desire it as well.

I remember my first laptop had a finger scanner on the side and that was used for passwords. Mind you this was like 15 years ago too lol. Thought it was the coolest thing.

Larry - July 22, 2024, 7:59 pm
Use an opensource password manager. Such as Bitwarden and Keepassxc.
