I got my B.S. in animation with a specialization in visual effects. After a couple of years, I realized that it was getting me nowhere. I've basically abandoned 3D graphics now.

Now start building 3D printables and make a patreon.

Here to randomly add;

Hell yeah! It can be kinda niche sometimes, but it never hurts to learn something new. For a project I was doing in UE5 I had to basically re-learn blender from the ground up to make something that just straight up didn't have a free model already released, I forget how complicated it can be.

For your modeling and such, did you mean Blender as well, or did you mean something more technical, such as CAD? Equally as fun either way.

Don't abandon you talents. I abandoned two of mine. My boyfriend abandoned his. We both regret it. Nowadays there is a lot you can do on your own. You don't necessarily have to get a job doing it anymore.

Did you learn how to make a 3D Donut in Blender?
I feel like that's the right of passage learning 3D lol
