Thread: [\[SOURCE\] 3lite Browser -multi-user web browser - filled with ALOT](#) infomiho - June 28, 2011, 3:02 pm

3lite Browser - multiuser Browser, advanced

I worked on this one long time ago, but it was for a contest and I won an award. It's very good, I'd say, I even have 19 pages documentation for it. It isn't the greatest, it isn't the best, but it will be VERY helpful to the beginners.

It's well designed, and it's scalable.

I didn't quite finish it, as I didn't pass to the state championship (DON'T KNOW WHY, BECAUSE I WAS THERE AND THERE WERE FUCKING CALCULATORS FFS !!)

I'm publishing the whole source, so you can instatly edit it and improove, if used (AND IT WILL BE) please © me

The program itself contains about 10 forms and it's big. That is the reason I'm publishing it.

It uses IE webbrowser, as weren't motivated to work with Gecko and WebKit.

You think mate ?

Everytime you logoff - COOKIE CLEANING TIME

EDIT: Why do you flame ? You didn't even try to constructively comment ?

Deceptive - June 28, 2011, 3:13 pm

We've seen a lot of browsers, but I guess most of them are still basing off the IE base(still using Internet Explorer settings) so why not use the many tutorials on how to use GeckoFX?

1. Read the thread
2. Read the thread
3. I wasn't interested, nor skilled to pull off something like that

If I passed to the state championship, I would work on it hard and I would implement WebKit - because Gecko is shit.

I saw the whole thread, it's not that hard to implement a different web browsing base. You can calm down.

Sorry for raging, because it's ordinary for people at this forum to flame, spam and hate without reading and trying it out.

And you said: Why didn't you use Gecko while it was all written, so, sorry.

Ingenuity - June 28, 2011, 3:37 pm

I suppose it's okay. Why not just take a look at my webbrowser - it uses gecko and it's a pretty good example.

Will do sir, but I don't like webbrowsers, they are... overused.

I remember I made one of these when I was learning .NET. Webbrowsers are a great way to learn, but tend not to get overly popular as most people stick the more popular ones (FF,IE,Chrome..etc.)

Its is ordinary when someone posts a help thread without searching/is lazy, posts something related to keylogger, rat, crypter, or booter, makes another (yet) another webbrowser.

Didn't quite understand your english, so simple, is this a + or a - for me ?

(this is an old project, webbrowser, I moved on since then)

I explained the scenarios in which a person will rage in this section. Either someone posts a help thread without search or they are lazy, they made a RAT, booter, crypter, or stealer, or they make a common program (such as an email/sms bomber, auto typer, or webbrowser).

So neutral comment.

If you don't want to be flamed, don't show it as an extremely usefull program. That's my opinion.

There is a lot of GOOD VB's browser that use Gecko. Your browser is shit.

You think I'm a bloody VB.net beginner, well I'm more than a HF crypter bitch, my goal is to master C#, C and C++, I'm not a bloody skid, and you sir are a bad member of this community, I'll quote myself "If you don't have anything useful to say, please don't say anything..."

I made this browser long time ago, I'm not promoting it in any way, someone b.umped it and here we are...

I now ask you, were you skilled in VB.net as you are now, if you are skilled now anyways..., 1 year ago?

I personally don't care about your opinion, but you should work on your attitude.

It looks all right. You should use a combobox instead of a textbox for typing in the url. With the combobox, you can add the auto completion, which will be handy for going back to a page that is already visited in the past.
