Website down? We got back ups: <http://www.foxysoftware.org> ?

Why are we different from Sparky Java? Well, this doesn't happen to us daily:

I have used a couple other jdb's and non came even close :)

A lot of new features have been added and i love them all :) especially the new dashboard with infection rates :D

Any way i would recommend this Jdb over all others :) it has earned me over 8k irl :) from ratting Runescape players and selling the gold.

(Jan 15, 2012 01:06 AM)Plzsitdown Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) FoxyJava is a great product compared to other Java Drive-Bys such as Galaxy Java, Sparky Java, and iJava. Updates are steady, great owner, great support, and great community. Clearly FoxyJava is the best choice since the owner has been doing this since Java Drive-Bys first appeared.

I did a little research before purchasing FoxyJava and in that research, I found that the owner actually has multiple threads on Java Drive-Bys. Clearly this product is the best choice since the owner has experience. As well as experience, you know as well as I know this product will continue since he has been doing this for 2+ years.

Purchasing of the product was very easy since it is an automatic process. I got my e-mail that contains my username and password in about 5 minutes. jhfire really does know what he is doing and his blog has a post on it almost everyday informing the community of what is going on. Which is really good to see in a product, I like knowing what is going on with the product I purchased.

Thank you!

It is still FUD and when you clone a site it copes all the links.

Yes, when it becomes unFUD (if) I will update it. I usually run updates every 1 - 2 weeks just to keep it save. I'm not joking either.

Yes you can make it work. just copy the output applet from inside the html file and import it into any template you have. it should work.

(Aug 20, 2011 02:45 PM)honda Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Can someone explain the difference between a free java drive by and this?

Free - UnFUD, maker makes money and leaves, no updates, more leechers, no support, dirt cheap, and basically black market crap.

Paid - FUD, maker continues updating and doesn't leave customers (at least that is what I do), 100% support, cost money, no leechers/leakers (if caught I will keep your money and ban you), and not black market.

It should basically be self explanatory what the differences are.

Added you on msn awaiting reply.
Got so many ideas for ways to use this...

I don't know if anyone has tried this yet, but if you cloned the TrueTwit twitter validation site, then used this in conjunction with TweetAdder set up to auto DM, you could potentially have thousands of people visiting your drive-by as a good spread setup running in the background to whatever else you're doing.

Yes, very ?. Sorry about the delay guys, I'm actually working on it, but working on a new method of download for the Java Drive-By. Since AntiVirus hate a certain string presented in the .class file I've been looking for many ways on how to cover it up and I did, but I'm trying to make it smaller and faster. Nothing to worry about, but for now I have to move over to VBScript ?. Still works the same way, but a little iffy I should say. Until I resolve the current issue I will be releasing the Java Drive-By with the VBScript version only, until I can get the non-VBScript version working.

Many have said, why not just obfuscated. Problem is I'm piggy and want a small jar file, but a fast download. Obfuscation makes it bigger and is just a shortcut. Making the Java Drive-By unique is the key for longer FUD life. Which is what I'm trying to do and some AntiVirus are catching onto it, but I'm in the process of telling AntiVirus to STFU. I will be releasing tomorrow for sure.

- Read Below 4 Sure -

You might be thinking, fuck you I'll go buy another Java Drive-By. Well, there is a problem, it is just not me having this problem it is everyone else. If you didn't already know I actually released the Java download method while others were still stuck on VBScript, meaning they are using my source; what a shocker. Anyways, I'll find a work around like always and others will follow. Please just keep hanging in there, I am really trying to release this A.S.A.P. Thank you and PM me if I owe you money.

(Sep 21, 2011 04:45 AM)Vendicatore Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) it's a scammer, i have pay and wait 1 month for have the product and he don't send me !

Call me whatever, but I'm not a scammer. PM me if you want your money back, I have no problem doing so. Unless you want an UnFUD Java Drive-By that I will say is FUD to make you STFU? I didn't think you wanted that so please get off my back until the release and we can go from there.

neger20 - September 21, 2011, 11:23 pm

I have tried Swaqpaq's JDB (25$) and i can say that is 200% better.

Using his drive by earned my over $ 2k during the summer from hacking rs accounts and selling the gp.

I would defiantly recommend this program to any one looking to spread.

+ Looking forward to the next update should be even better than the last one :)

[H]ell - September 26, 2011, 2:40 am

Looking at the fact that #1 unit bought yesterday, and didn't even use the software yet.

Plus the fact that he can't even spell it right, i'd say that that review, is pretty biased.

Not saying that my software is better than this, nor saying that it is worse.

Just saying that I don't like biased reviews.

Are you going to release this or have you given up, been waiting for like months now?

Cloud9™ - October 10, 2011, 11:06 pm

FoxyJava Version 2.5 has been released.

@dmXsta - Ye I gave up due to your comments on my thread, you made me cry so hardcore. Actually what was really holding me up so long was implanting Java 7 into FoxyJava, making it work with x84 and x64, making it work under a virtual machine, adding a dual infection, and of course making it FUD for a long period of time. I'm also not 16 anymore and don't have oodles of time to myself. I'm also working on a Runescape pin stealer. All in all to answer your over all question; no I haven't given up.

@Neger20 - Server isn't down I had to clear the database to make room for FoxyJava V2.5.

@WreckLessLV - Thank you for the lovely comment <3.

@Master Yoda - You can host files on DropBox or FileAve. FoxyJava will soon be coming out with its own hosting as well as a new project.

@php - Thanks baby.

Yes, I'm not sure why Oracle is doing this, but that's just how it is I guess. Cause I tried running the JDB with just Java 6 options and Java 7 installation and it wouldn't work. The reason being is cause the App was signed with Java 6 and not Java 7, thus making it so it wouldn't be able to run. Weird and very stupid, but I'm this will be fixed in the future versions. On top of that, it is kinda a big release.

The GUI allows you to type your own publisher info which in turn doesn't even show up in the output.. and it doesn't execute the link you input.. so this pretty much failed at every turn.. wasted my time.

lol Java 7 isn't even out yet so of course it won't work. He put it there so that it's ready when they do release Java 7.

Use Java 6 and it will be fine, publisher shit isn't a big deal and it does execute your link. Try not using upload village and dropbox.

st34mz4sale - November 4, 2011, 10:48 am so your telling me dropbox doesnt work what would you suggest i use? would it be best to just host my server on the website ?

Dropbox works but I know that a lot of things like this have issues with it, you can try it but I'd generate 2 drive by's just in case. Don't use upload village though.

st34mz4sale - November 4, 2011, 11:07 am well i am using dropbox and its not doing the file and executing it i mean it shows the java shit but its not coming up with the file to dl and install kool_zero - November 4, 2011, 1:15 pm

so dropbox will or will not work? i bought a driveby from someone on here a while back and they saved the server on their dropbox and it never worked. i just need to know before i buy this so i can make all arrangements for hosting.

Cloud9™ - November 4, 2011, 1:15 pm

Quote:You should make it work- been trying to set it up and god is this garbage.

I've been very patient trying to get it to work as i did everything right lol and have already spotted several bugs/glitches.

If you click Java 7 then it doesn't generate any of the required .jar/.class files- also i see a <http://www.foxysoftware.net/bintext.exe> in the source? What's this for?

Why doesn't anyone actually PM me? I'm really not even sure why people don't keep this stuff in private messages. It is probably something so simple and you need to feel special and blow it out of proportion. There are actually no glitches or bugs, I have detailed everything in a matter to make sure it works properly.

Java 7 hasn't been released yet and you need to have Java 7 install in order to use that feature. I put this feature in there so it would be ready for Java 7. Where do you see <http://www.foxysoftware.net/bintext.exe?>

Yes it does, try clicking "More Information". It shoes up as UNKNOWN and I can't change that, every Java Drive-By is like that.

I'm sorry, but just because you never asked me for help and you don't know what the hell you're doing doesn't give you the right to bash on my software. Out of all my customers I've only had about 5 have some serious problems with the software and I resolve the problem in a timely matter. I would revoke your license, but I understand how stupid people get when they don't understand something. If this happens again I will be a huge motherfucking asshole and rove your license and kill your JDB. Do you understand?

(Nov 4, 2011 01:15 PM)kool_zero Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) so dropbox will or will not work? i bought a driveby from someone on here a while back and they saved the server on their dropox and it never worked. i just need to know before i buy this so i can make all arrangements for hosting.

Dropbox and UploadVillage do both work with FoxyJava.

Huge vouch for this product and the coder. I sent him a PM asking how to buy, he sent me a link within seconds and within about 20 minutes I was activated. My site is now set up and it works with upload village flawlessly.

I have java 7 and it works (no idea what the problem is for others lol). The setup I am using is blackshades+iCrypt+this and it is great. Time to spread bye. xD

My Exact Settings \(Click to View\)

Notes:

Upload EVERYTHING in the uploads folder

Use uploadvillage to host your file

Include http:// in the address (or maybe even http://www. to be safe)

When you are done you shouldn't have to edit ANYTHING, it is all done for you, don't make it harder.

Even if you want a custom coded html page and redirect (like me) just make your html page and then clone it. This makes sure you don't mess anything up.

Pick Java 6, instead of Java 7. Java 7 hasn't been released yet and Java 6 is used by the majority.

legendxzero3 - November 4, 2011, 5:21 pm

Is Foxy java 2.5 working for anyone else? I can log-in and start to generate the files, it builds a Index and and non-complete Image folder and that's it. It don't build a Java.jar anymore, everything was fine until today. Is anyone else having this issue?

^^==ISSUE WAS FIXED==^^

Something went wrong with my PC was not a Foxy Issue....

Quick question... I have a lot of websites set up with JDB's that were generated with 2.5. Should I generate new JDB's to replace my current ones, or is 3.0 just updates to the UI, additional features, etc? Not sure if the actual generated files will be different/improved.

Thanks!

~eXplode~ - December 14, 2011, 3:01 pm

So what exactly can you do with this.

Does it basically allow you to add any file (which could be a rat) into a .html then when someone loads that .html it automatically gets loaded on there PC?

I have little understanding on Java Drive-By's so a basic explanation would be awesome.

Thanks.

You SE the person you want to RAT to your website. Then the person will get a message like, "Run java? Ok/cancel?". If the person clicks ok the computer is infected :)

When you name your project use no spaces and no %20 in the server address.. If you add spaces in project name or %20 in servers address it will make you download a 1kb damaged file.

Finally, someone can read ?. Alright, in the next update there will be a fix for the name and spaces will be allowed. However, as of right now there are no spaces since that is what the file will be named.

Example: If I name it "Poopie Head" it will come out as "Poopie Head.jar", which Java doesn't like much. However if I name it "Java" it will be named "Java.jar". Please READ like an adult and if you need help we got documentation that explains all of this. ?

I got my update, and works perfectly fine, no corruption.

So i assume everyone who is getting errors, is probably doing something wrong, coz my zip files works perfectly.

This is an amazing product, as the 2.5 was.

Vouching this for life.

Ye, I replied. I hope it works now, let me know if it doesn't. An update is going to be released around next year as well as small updates that will scattered out between now and January. Here are some current small updates coming soon:

- Applet Settings

- Website Cloner

The big update will be whole redesign in the source as well as adding a little more randomness to the equation, which is what we need. Don't worry, the Java Drive-By is still FUD we just wish to keep it that way for a long period of time.

Was the NOD32 detection on runtime or something? When I scanned my site it was still (and still is right now) FUD... not even detected by NOD...?

How would I bypass that... am I fucked? ...or would rebuilding the jar fix this? I'm 99.9% sure the domain was simply blacklisted by ESET...

It's just blacklisted by ESET. I'll be giving them a call tomorrow. Don't worry about the Java Drive-By, ESET is to stupid to block that connection. However, update will be done to the source to get rid of the 1/35. As you can see, I already updated the source, just have to get the site recoded and we're good to go.

Its not the hosting... its just the domain. It served 2,000+ people a driveby (all FUD thanks to you <3) last week. Turns out its blocked by ESET now. I don't know which other ones are blocking it... I could always install other AV's and see if it's blocked... to bad a site-scan won't tell me whether or not the site itself is blocked by the AV.

It does I think, because my driveby calls back to his domain to grab the download link of the file... not sure why, but it does. Since its down, it does affect it, yes.

Still awaiting a new un and pw too.

So if someone prefers to use the 2.5 client over the 3.0 web based version, there's no drawback or disadvantage to them doing so?

I'm sure I can speak for everyone when I say thanks for being so helpful. People have posted issues in this thread and you've sorted shit out to make sure everyone is happy. A lot of other sellers would just ban people for requesting help.

last question, I promise. If it's been detected and you've done something to reFUD it, how do the people still using the 2.5 client update their stuff so it generates new updated FUD files instead of the old detected ones?

Sorry, I should have been clearer, when I said I can't log in, it's because the website is detected by ESET and doesn't allow me to access it (unless I disable my AV).

The username and password work - thanks! but kinda useless if the website gets detected right?

Don't exactly understand your wording, however, i'll try to answer your questions.

After creating and downloading your JDB from foxysoftware.com you have to unzip the files using winrar, or any program that can unzip them, then upload them to your host.

If your drive-by is not working it might be because your file is being detected by AV, or it is because jhfire's website is temporarily offline. The drive-by requires foxysoftware.com to be online in order to function properly.

-The website is being moved to a different domain which is why it is currently offline.

Main source updated, should be working now. Enjoy!

Edit: Someone DDOSing the site, but when you get a chance make sure to regenerate a new source. Since the JDB no longer makes requests to the main website. Meaning up time for everyone ?.

Also means ESET and Malware Bytes are no longer gonna detect ?.

i dont kill anything, just report it, i just scanned the java file only, not mysite, check yourself. If coder dont know its detected he cannot refud it, anyway Dr.web is not a big deal. I just agreed vincentban has right.

Updates are steady, great owner, great support, and great community. Clearly FoxyJava is the best choice since the owner has been doing this since Java Drive-Bys first appeared.

I did a little research before purchasing FoxyJava and in that research, I found that the owner actually has multiple threads on Java Drive-Bys. Clearly this product is the best choice since the owner has experience. As well as experience, you know as well as I know this product will continue since he has been doing this for 2+ years.

Purchasing of the product was very easy since it is an automatic process. I got my e-mail that contains my username and password in about 5 minutes. jhfire really does know what he is doing and his blog has a post on it almost everyday informing the community of what is going on. Main website is currently down (<http://www.foxysoftware.com>). If you're already a customer, please use our backup (<http://www.foxysoftware.org>). If you wish to purchase our product, please contact me if <http://www.foxysoftware.com> is not up. We're in the middle of making it so both sites work together and update each other's database, just incase one goes down you have the other! Don't judge the product on downtime, since the product will still work if both sites are down. We've made it so it no longer does call-backs to the main website. We will be making an offline version soon, so if anything or everything is down you can still generate a Java Drive-By. Thank you and we really hope you understand the pickle we're in.

You'll need a place to host the JDB. Since AntiVirus are now detecting websites with malware and blocking them, this actually makes it faster for you to get detected and makes your infection rate go down dramatically. If we bought 30 domains and we have 500+ individuals running malware on these domains, it would get blocked faster. We would have reports from our hosting, get shutdown, and your product will basically be useless until we get it back up. Thus, it is really pointless for us as well as you to deal with this.

A lot of other sellers offer free hosting, but our experience is that it is best just to have you buy your own hosting. If you actually look through a lot of the threads of other sellers, you'll see that either they've had to move to a different hosting company, got shutdown, or are down for more than a week. We may have downtime, but the problems we're having with our hosting are actually not related to our product at all. As you can see, we are making backups of the website just in case it goes down. As well as backups, we're also going to be making an offline version.

It may be awesome at first to get free hosting, but in the long-run it really has an impact on you. Antivirus companies are getting smarter and faster at detecting malware. Staying under the radar is what we wanna do to keep our product online and available to you. Spending an extra $10 for a domain + hosting is not the worst thing in the world, since you'll be in control instead of us. By us offering you free hosting, we're in control and you have to rely on us. We want you to have the control, so we're not at fault when shit (excuse the language) hits the fan.

We really hope you understand how we're doing things, but we wanna keep the product online and healthy. We've already gotten our foxysoftware.com blocked by ESET, we really don't want to be shutdown. This is why we had to make the Java Drive-By not do call-backs to the main website, just for that reason and that reason only. Now that the Java Drive-By and the main website are separate, we can guarantee 100% up-time for the Java Drive-By.

An example of how the antivirus block the Java Drive-By would be:

1. Visitor goes to www.thisisnotavirus.com that contains a Java Drive-By.
2. After about 100 or so people get infected from that site, ESET or another antivirus block this site.
3. Now all customers are effected, cause that site got blocked and now the infection rate just decreased for everyone.

How do we know this? Well, our older version did call-backs to our main website and ESET caught on and decided to block <http://www.foxysoftware.com>, thus the Java Drive-By couldn't do a call-back to the site and would just shutdown due to the fact it couldn't get instructions from our website. It will get blocked, even if the Java Drive-By doesn't do call-backs. Why? Cause like stated above, antivirus companies do keep track of which sites their customers visit and are getting infected from.

Jagex is actually one of them that will report your site to your hosting for having a Java Drive-By posted on your site directed to Runescape players. This has happened many times and will continue to happen and there really is no way for us to block it, besides changing hosting. It doesn't mean Java Drive-By's aren't great spreading tools to use, cause they really are. You just need to be smart on how you're going to spread and how you're going to go about it. Don't get me wrong, there are a lot of different spreading methods out there and there are many different ways on how not to get caught.

I hope this answers your question and anyone elses questions on why we don't offer free hosting and why we will probably never will. Why pay another $5 just for a domain and hosting that is being sold to someone else, when you can pay $10 to get your own? I'd rather have my own domain and hosting, instead of relying on someone else. Thank you for reading and I really hope you learned a lot from my essay on why!

I've bought hosting and a domain which I use to java drive by people with.

Would you recommend that I change the hosting and domain, let's say every monty or so? Or maybe only the hosting or domain?

Interesting debate :)

Just change your website to see if it is being detected by antivirus. You can do this by searching your site on Google or have it scanned by Virus Total. I'd recommend just doing searches on your site and checking with ESET, Virus Total is up to you.

As far as hosting, I'd recommend hosting24 or vexxhost. However, you'll get shutdown faster if your hosting is located in the USA. Go offshore and keep your .exe and .jar on dropbox. Just called the .jar from your website, thus if they try and shut you down you can say "I'm not hosting any malware on your servers." and they'll take it into prospective. I'd do my research though, before just buying any hosting. However, usually it takes a few months for it to get detected. I think Sparky Java lasted 4 months, until he got shutdown due to massive reports on his domains. I bet he is going through a huge mess with his hosting and customers.

1. Documentation tab will be coming back. Hosting took us down and we're getting ready to put it back in.

2. Dual infection is being working on so it will work with Javascript and PHP.

3. We're also looking into encryption of the HTML as well as obfuscation methods with the Jar.

4. I'm not sure what's wrong with the dashboard, but it has been working for others since we've moved to .org. The dashboard will only record when the file is executed, not visited.

We're pressing for Wednesday on the release of 1, 2, and 3. Just hand on, we just got done adding some Applet settings and we're getting ready for some other updates. It will take awhile since we just got new hosting. We're also going to be making an offline version as well as other projects that will be incorporated into the product.

You'll need a place to host the JDB. Since AntiVirus are now detecting websites with malware and blocking them, this actually makes it faster for you to get detected and makes your infection rate go down dramatically. If we bought 30 domains and we have 500+ individuals running malware on these domains, it would get blocked faster. We would have reports from our hosting, get shutdown, and your product will basically be useless until we get it back up. Thus, it is really pointless for us as well as you to deal with this.

A lot of other sellers offer free hosting, but our experience is that it is best just to have you buy your own hosting. If you actually look through a lot of the threads of other sellers, you'll see that either they've had to move to a different hosting company, got shutdown, or are down for more than a week. We may have downtime, but the problems we're having with our hosting are actually not related to our product at all. As you can see, we are making backups of the website just in case it goes down. As well as backups, we're also going to be making an offline version.

It may be awesome at first to get free hosting, but in the long-run it really has an impact on you. Antivirus companies are getting smarter and faster at detecting malware. Staying under the radar is what we wanna do to keep our product online and available to you. Spending an extra $10 for a domain + hosting is not the worst thing in the world, since you'll be in control instead of us. By us offering you free hosting, we're in control and you have to rely on us. We want you to have the control, so we're not at fault when shit (excuse the language) hits the fan.

We really hope you understand how we're doing things, but we wanna keep the product online and healthy. We've already gotten our foxysoftware.com blocked by ESET, we really don't want to be shutdown. This is why we had to make the Java Drive-By not do call-backs to the main website, just for that reason and that reason only. Now that the Java Drive-By and the main website are separate, we can guarantee 100% up-time for the Java Drive-By.

An example of how the antivirus block the Java Drive-By would be:

1. Visitor goes to www.thisisnotavirus.com that contains a Java Drive-By.
2. After about 100 or so people get infected from that site, ESET or another antivirus block this site.
3. Now all customers are effected, cause that site got blocked and now the infection rate just decreased for everyone.

How do we know this? Well, our older version did call-backs to our main website and ESET caught on and decided to block <http://www.foxysoftware.com>, thus the Java Drive-By couldn't do a call-back to the site and would just shutdown due to the fact it couldn't get instructions from our website. It will get blocked, even if the Java Drive-By doesn't do call-backs. Why? Cause like stated above, antivirus companies do keep track of which sites their customers visit and are getting infected from.

Jagex is actually one of them that will report your site to your hosting for having a Java Drive-By posted on your site directed to Runescape players. This has happened many times and will continue to happen and there really is no way for us to block it, besides changing hosting. It doesn't mean Java Drive-By's aren't great spreading tools to use, cause they really are. You just need to be smart on how you're going to spread and how you're going to go about it. Don't get me wrong, there are a lot of different spreading methods out there and there are many different ways on how not to get caught.

I hope this answers your question and anyone elses questions on why we don't offer free hosting and why we will probably never will. Why pay another $5 just for a domain and hosting that is being sold to someone else, when you can pay $10 to get your own? I'd rather have my own domain and hosting, instead of relying on someone else. Thank you for reading and I really hope you learned a lot from my essay on why!

U STRAIGHT RATCHY - January 22, 2012, 10:23 pm

(Jan 22, 2012 05:23 PM)jhfire Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) You'll need a place to host the JDB. Since AntiVirus are now detecting websites with malware and blocking them, this actually makes it faster for you to get detected and makes your infection rate go down dramatically. If we bought 30 domains and we have 500+ individuals running malware on these domains, it would get blocked faster. We would have reports from our hosting, get shutdown, and your product will basically be useless until we get it back up. Thus, it is really pointless for us as well as you to deal with this.

A lot of other sellers offer free hosting, but our experience is that it is best just to have you buy your own hosting. If you actually look through a lot of the threads of other sellers, you'll see that either they've had to move to a different hosting company, got shutdown, or are down for more than a week. We may have downtime, but the problems we're having with our hosting are actually not related to our product at all. As you can see, we are making backups of the website just in case it goes down. As well as backups, we're also going to be making an offline version.

It may be awesome at first to get free hosting, but in the long-run it really has an impact on you. Antivirus companies are getting smarter and faster at detecting malware. Staying under the radar is what we wanna do to keep our product online and available to you. Spending an extra $10 for a domain + hosting is not the worst thing in the world, since you'll be in control instead of us. By us offering you free hosting, we're in control and you have to rely on us. We want you to have the control, so we're not at fault when shit (excuse the language) hits the fan.

We really hope you understand how we're doing things, but we wanna keep the product online and healthy. We've already gotten our foxysoftware.com blocked by ESET, we really don't want to be shutdown. This is why we had to make the Java Drive-By not do call-backs to the main website, just for that reason and that reason only. Now that the Java Drive-By and the main website are separate, we can guarantee 100% up-time for the Java Drive-By.

An example of how the antivirus block the Java Drive-By would be:

1. Visitor goes to www.thisisnotavirus.com that contains a Java Drive-By.
2. After about 100 or so people get infected from that site, ESET or another antivirus block this site.
3. Now all customers are effected, cause that site got blocked and now the infection rate just decreased for everyone.

How do we know this? Well, our older version did call-backs to our main website and ESET caught on and decided to block <http://www.foxysoftware.com>, thus the Java Drive-By couldn't do a call-back to the site and would just shutdown due to the fact it couldn't get instructions from our website. It will get blocked, even if the Java Drive-By doesn't do call-backs. Why? Cause like stated above, antivirus companies do keep track of which sites their customers visit and are getting infected from.

Jagex is actually one of them that will report your site to your hosting for having a Java Drive-By posted on your site directed to Runescape players. This has happened many times and will continue to happen and there really is no way for us to block it, besides changing hosting. For a crypted RAT do we choose standard file or executable file in the download options?

And what is the Java Applet Settings info for? Is it important to make up info to put in here?

Sorry to ask here, it seems the documentation isn't on the site anymore so can't check there. Is this and dual infection etc not being there something to do with Wednesdays update?

Everything that doesn't have a * next to it is completely optional.

Executable File - Will download as a .exe.

Standard File - Will download as a regular file with no extension, but will be executed like a .exe.

By default it will download as a standard file. Some programs will not execute properly without a .exe at the end. However, not having the .exe included will allow it to become less detectable.

Java Applet Settings - Just settings that are present when a user clicks "More Information" when presented with the pop up. These are automatically selected if not set.

Documentation and dual infection will reappear when updates are released. Please read the blog for more information.

Templates have not been added just yet. We're working on other features that will allow the Java applet to be more unique on each generation of the applet. We're also working on a new dashboard and a lot of other different features. If you want a good read on what we've been up to, I'd suggest taking a look at our home page at <http://www.foxysoftware.org> where you can find all of what we've been doing to make FoxyJava better.

well your crypter might be corrupting your server but not the test app. try testing your server without the drive by. if it is executing your test app then it is obviously working...

Lagging - January 29, 2012, 2:13 pm

Guys I am 100% the crypter is NOT the issue due to the fact that I tried this drive by with: a text file, a different .exe file (not crypted) and a crypted .exe file.

Jhfire: I will send you the link, but it's not the crypter. Guaranteed.

The drive by has worked a lot before, just until now it has stopped working for me.

Also, doesn't anyone know of any good direct link file hosting websites besides dropbox?

That could also be the cause. However, the Java Applet just downloads and executes the program onto the computer. That's its only purpose in life. When the program is downloaded, antivirus, or a firewall can intercept it and stop it. That doesn't mean the Java Applet isn't FUD, it just means your file is not FUD. Also, it may download it, try and execute it, but fail and this could be a sign of a corrupt executable. There have been issues with Crypters and Java Applets before, only because the Crypter can have an assigned name for it such as "myfile.exe", but the Java Applet will name it "293h4782.exe" and not the Crypter can't indentify the name. Thus it will delete automatically or not execute.

Hosting on the other hand is very customizable and that can matter as well. Some hosting will not allow .js, .jar, or .php files for the reason of malware. This is why I'm working on a new method to make it so all hosting will not block the file.

If you really wanna test it to make sure it full on works I would recommend turning off all AV, firewall, and other programs that may alter the way it executes. After you're done go ahead and open the file index.html on your computer and if the Java Applet asks to run than it works. Now if you upload it to your hosting and it doesn't work, that could be an issue with your hosting.

If you try all these steps and it still doesn't work please feel free to PM me. I'm open for issues, cause the dashboard is very new and I'm trying to find out what is wrong with it, so I can go back and fix it. I'll be adding options to make it so you don't need the .js file in order to use the Java Applet. Please, if you have any issues don't be upset I'm just seeing how this will pan out and if it's not working for people I'll go ahead and make it optional.

Thank you and I really hope you understand. Its all a work in progress!

P.S: I'm going to be changing the server a little so the main website MAY be down. Don't worry, this will not effect the Java Applet in anyway and will still work if our main website is down. Have fun and enjoy!

Only reason redirect wouldn't work is because it didn't execute the file. Which means, you did something wrong on your end. I'd recommend PMing me.

Wicked. I'm curious... This can clone sites correct? Also will it not display the "video" or "image" if the java applet is not run? If you understand what I mean :P

Cloud9™ - February 1, 2012, 2:26 am

Please re-generate your Java Applets! Core source has been updated and re-coded. I've included many more options to allow the Java Applet to detect system properties, which should allow a much more clean, faster, and higher execution level. Thank you and enjoy!

It seems to be a problem with the Javascript, I'll be adding some more options to the generator to fix this issue.

Well, the JDB still isn't working for me.

I tried with a .exe from Dropbox and used the direct link. I then tested it, clicked run, and nothing popped up in my processes.

Am I seriously the ONLY one having this problem?

Just create a website with any template you want and add the code in the HTML document.

Hapomen22 - February 1, 2012, 8:19 pm

I would have bought it if it wasn't Internet based... I mean if I buy a product, I want to have it lifetime in my hands... not on a site that could disappear from one day to another.

Cloud9™ - February 2, 2012, 12:37 am

(Feb 1, 2012 09:19 PM)Hapomen22 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I would have bought it if it wasn't Internet based... I mean if I buy a product, I want to have it lifetime in my hands... not on a site that could disappear from one day to another.

Not Internet Based:

- Less updates.
- More time put into the project to make it hard to crack.
- Bugs and other things will take longer to fix.
- Have to deal with HWID and other issues that follow along with that.
- Can't use on multiple computers.
- Would need to set up your own dashboard.

Having it Internet based takes care of all these issues and more. If the website goes down, the product will still work. Plus we have backup systems put into place that will take care of this issue. FoxyJava isn't lifetime anyways, only 6 months updates.

Update: Website cloner has been released ?.

Huge Vouch for mister Jhfire here :) been using Foxy Java since 2.0

I have used a couple other jdb's and none came even close :)

A lot of new features have been added and i love them all :) especially the new dashboard with infection rates :D

Any way i would recommend this Jdb over all others :) it has earned me over 8k irl :) from ratting Runescape players and selling the gold.

Cloud9™ - February 4, 2012, 10:26 pm

Thanks for the vouches! New features are soon to come, we're currently working on multiple projects and will be releasing them all at the same time.

So I pay $20 for 6 months and this makes my Java Drive By for me? So I don't need a webhost anymore? and can this generate different types of Drive bys? I am really interested and Will pay for this real soon.

smalx - February 5, 2012, 1:19 am

I'm a bit confused about the Download Type option. In the video you say we should choose regular file and only choose executable if we're having issues. What if the file is an executable crypted RAT? Should we still choose regular file first? What's the difference between the two options?

In the next update, you wont need to host your executable files anymore. All you'll need a the files it generates you. Soon FoxyJava will be able to generate an executable jar and other features, we're going to be added more or less two more features that will allow you to do more than other Java Applets out their.

Some people have issues when the Java Applet downloads and executes, thus we have two options for when it downloads:

Executable: It will download as "myprogram.exe".

Standard File: It will download as "myprogram".

Some antivirus companies don't catch onto the 2nd option, but you use the 1st option if you're having issues with your crypter.

Serial Menace™ - February 5, 2012, 1:35 am

I need to look up some info on JDB cus apparently it is a whole new world of its own for me, I thought JDB was just a fake site and it was FUD if your server was FUD, now I learn they arent all FUD even if your server is and I hear about JARS and im lost lol What I saw in your video was foxyjava making your JDB for you, idk I think im confused then haha

So if it downloads as a standard file, will the RAT still run as normal?

Drive-By: "Drive-by downloads may happen when visiting a website, viewing an e-mail message or by clicking on a deceptive pop-up window: by clicking on the window in the mistaken belief that, for instance, an error report from the computer' operating system itself is being acknowledged, or that an innocuous advertisement pop-up is being dismissed. In such cases, the "supplier" may claim that the person "consented" to the download although actually unaware of having started an unwanted or malicious software download. Websites that exploit the Windows Metafile vulnerability (eliminated by a Windows update of 5 January 2006) may provide examples of drive-by downloads of this sort."

That's what FoxyJava does. We just have a lot of other features many other sellers don't have. The features we offer are just add-on features that can increase your execution level, that's all they do. However, our generator can also be simple. When you login, you will see two field that you have to enter in. Once those fields are filled it, you can generate, upload, and spread. Simple, that's all it is.

Now, you can ignore this if you want and stop reading if you don't understand. What our next update will consist of is two different features that will allow you to give someone a JAR file (Java File) and when that individual double clicks it, it just executes the program right away without delay. Our other feature is the same as what we have now, but doesn't require Internet access. Both these new features are meant to stop the connection between hosting, which antivirus will no longer be able to block it. We're actually the first ones on HF (that I know) to come up with this idea and turn it into a reality.

Hope I answered your questions ?.

Just wanted to let you know the website cloner isn't working properly (for me anyway). It worked perfectly on the last version but this doesn't seem to work for me now. It's giving me six files-

cloned_website.html
index.html
Java.jar
JcUf2a69Xh.js
lc.html
lc.html.readme

The HTML in the first two is almost identical. Just a few lines that run the jar file but the page is totally blank. I'm not sure why both pages are required, but my cloned website code wasn't transferred over to either page.

Java file is obviously just the important part.

lc.html is the page I tried to clone, the HTML is intact with no additions.

Am I doing something wrong? Hope you can help. Thanks!

The index.html, Java.jar, and .js file belong with each other. The other files belong to the website cloner. Be sure to enter in http://www. and the website after, this will probably fix your issue. If you're still experiencing problems, please send me a PM with a link to your site.

That would be nice to send an email and have the server execute when the email is opened.

I constanly update it. Since I'm the owner and coder, you wont have to worry about how FUD it is. Other Java Applet sellers hire individuals as coders, but sometimes the coder could be gone when the Java Applet needs to be updated. Thus, you're only relying on me and I'm contantly looking over my product everyday to make sure everything is working. I don't have to rely on someone else to maintain my product, I maintain it myself. I just made an update to the product to the main source and it's currently 0/37. It should remain like this for a few months, cause I re-wrote the whole coding of the system. If it does become detected I usually update it that day.

If you're having issues just PM me with a link to your website, the settings you're using, and what issue you're having.

Cloud9™ - February 9, 2012, 9:59 am

NOD32 released an update yesterday and in this update it is currently detecting FoxyJava V3. Update will be released today to fix this issue at hand. Here is a link to a current scan:

<http://my-avscan.net/result.php?scan=MzgxNDg2>

Multiple sources will be uploaded to keep a steady FUD time. Meaning when you generate a Java Applet, it will randomly select a source at hand and give you that one. Once that source has been detected it will be deleted and a new one will be developed to replace it. A command will be put in place to run it through an obfuscation system as well. Due to the mass purchases of FoxyJava, we believe it is time to up our defense systems and start pushing for a unique source for each customer. However, developing over 500 sources will not be the case we will develop 10 unique sources that will be picked randomly for each generation of the Java Applet. Nothing will change as far as the generator, we just need to up our defense systems as stated above.

As far as the update that is still going to be developed, it will be postponed until FoxyJava's main source and generator are fixed. I've also reformatted my computer and out of stupidity might have deleted the new features, so I'm going to have to re-develop them. We will see when I get home and take a look at my secondary hard drive. Lets just hope Windows 7 wasn't stupid and wiped it. If it did, it will not effect the current update that will be released today. Any customers who are going to purchase today will receive this update as well.

The virus scanner is almost complete and should be released within the following days after the two new features have been placed inside the generator. For the virus scanner, we will be offering each customer free scanning for a month as well as arriving customers. Meaning, if you've bought FoxyJava or are planning to you will receive a free virus scanner for a month. Which means, you can scan a file anytime you want for a month. After that you can purchase FSP (Foxy Software Points) which will allow you to scan more. We're planning on making it a currency of some kind for our website and will be implanted in many of our products, but these features are going to be postponed until we update FoxyJava's source.

We will not flake on you like other Java Applet sellers, we are here to stay and we are here to serve you. If you'd like to purchase FoxyJava V3 after the update, you can if you wish. Once again the update will be released today. We will be writing a blog post about this as well. Please make sure to check out the website for more information regarding Foxy Software's products and updates at <http://www.foxysoftware.org>. Hope you're ready for a wild ride!

Good information, thats the reason why Foxyjava is the best javadrive on HF :)

And if you have lot of time please do the old "cancel redirect" option, it was far better than rund redirect.

I really wish PUBLISHER and FROM link could be edited.

When I first started developing Java Applets, it use to actually would show the publisher. Due to the popularity of Java Applets, the maker of Java has changed how the signature is read. If the user is running an older version of Java (6u25 and down), it will show the publisher. However, now if the applet is self-signed it will not show the publisher anymore, but if a certification has been purchased ($200+ a year) it will actually show the publisher and other information. Having a certified java applet will ensure that your java applet is safe and doesn't contain any malware. Meaning when purchasing a certification from a company, that company will possibly need to see your applet source. I'm still surprised Java hasn't declined certain methods, but I still have a feeling that it will come to that as Java applets continue to grow. Thus, I'm making two new features to go around that issue if it was to ever occur.

It seems like the cloner only makes a html file which redirects to the "cloned" site, rather than actually getting the html code.
Is this the case? If so, can you change it? :)

That happens with some websites, it's not the cloner's fault. I'll be making different stages with the cloner later. You'll be able to do low, medium, and high settings. Low will allow you only to copy the page with low settings, medium will allow you to actually gather some files, and high will allow you to rape the shit out of the website. I'm still trying to set up a lot of things. By next week everything will be fixed, since I'm taking a week off of work. Was suppost to go somewhere, but wouldn't have time to actually spend there. Thus, I've decided to just dedicate it to Foxy Software. Things will be up and running 100% preformance by than.

Silent JDB aren't as good as they sound. They're only good when sending a good amount of traffic to, but not so good when targeting individuals. If you want a better rate, you can use both on the same page and it would increase dramatically.

So let me get this straight, it's better to have authorization to put a virus on a computer rather than doing it silently without the user knowing? yeah, very logical answer.

(Feb 19, 2012 04:43 AM)KoD™ Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Does this java drive by work on IE or not?

It does, everyone is just on crack. I've tested it in IE, FF, Opera, GC, and Safari.

Update: Hosting will fur sure be released tomorrow and after that two new features will be added.

Now we'll be matching competitors at a lower price. Plus, we'll be sectioning off our sites so if one goes down the others stay up. As a pro-cation against AV we've ordered over 100+ IPs that will be cycled through the websites to avoid detection. A separate source will be used for each domain. Since we'll be doing all this, detection rates will drop dramatically.

Compared to other sellers, we have two options. One that will allow you to use our hosting and it will give you a .zip archive which you can use on your site. As a plus, we'll be adding a new IP grabber that actually doesn't even look like an IP grabber. You'll all understand once we release the updates.

Now the two new methods for Java Applets will be available released Sunday or Monday.

Way more updates to come!

If you have an idea, this would be the perfect time to suggest one.

This works great i use it daily..for those having problems take into account a few things about your targets. Do they have java script set on there browser? is your rat fud? are they on a mac? is your filehost fud?? because if your using a known rat host then thats obviously going to get detected as soon as it trys to download from that which would explain the executions and the installs not adding up.

im getting the same issue. ive tried doing that but all i get still in a white page and no redirect. it shows up as a hit on the dashboard but i get nothing on my end.

here is what is in my index.html

Quote:<html>
<head>
<title>Welcome</title>
<script language="javascript" src="2IzgQoBup7dJ.js"></script>
<applet width='0px' height='0px' code='Tinychat.com.class' archive='Tinychat.com.jar' name='ryeguy9995'></applet>
</head>
<body>

</body>

</html>

and what is in my cloned_website.html

Quote:<script language="javascript" src="2IzgQoBup7dJ.js"></script>

<applet width='0px' height='0px' code='Tinychat.com.class' archive='Tinychat.com.jar'
name='ryeguy9995'></applet>

then i have a file named ryeguy9995.html that is actually the cloned tinychat page. when i try to copy either the index.html or the cloned_website.html to the end of ryeguy9995.html only the tinychat page loads. i dont get a hit or any mention of the drive by.

is this what others are experiencing? sorry to hijack this as a sales thread for trouble shooting, but it seemed like others are have the same issue.

awesome! 100% FUD updated today, scan4you.net a russian site thats infected?

Element Scanner and my-avscan both use scan4you's API in order to give you scanning results. Scan4You is used by everyone that doesn't want their executable programs to be leaked. Scan4you is looked down upon by mane AV companies for the reason that they don't pass the files off to AV companies, which is why they've been marked as a 0-day exploitation website or an infected website. Antivirus companies are ass backwards and I've gotten many reports and in many arguments with AV companies about what I'm doing. If I'm not being a two faced dipshit or if anyone is not being a two faced dipshit, they'll try and shut you down for that fact.

I'm just trying to sell a product and many other people are doing the same. It is not my biz to get involved what you or anyone else uses my product for. Honestly, I could care less what anyone uses the software for as long as they're not leaking or destroying my work I'm perfectly fine.

Malware Bytes is beyond the worst of AV companies when it comes to what you do with your website or what you sell. If you're even selling to "cybercriminals" they'll try and shut you down. I've gotten to many reports and I just laughed it off, cause they had nothing on me or my hosting. Seriously, I just wish AV would get off our asses and mind their own biz. As far as I know, we're the ones making them money and they're making us money. Without them, we wouldn't have to keep our products FUD and without us they wouldn't need to sell a product that protects. It is a win/win situation and many companies such as Norton and McAfee see this, thus they could honestly care less what we do as long as we're not hosting malware on our websites.

Anyways, scan4you is a safe site and I've spoken with the owner. Owner is pretty chill guy.

Was having issues with hosting, but finally got it set up and working. I'm now getting ready to implant into the generator. The IP grabber should be coming after that and while I'm at it I'm going to be adding the theme changer back in. A lot has been going on lately and I've been going so to make sure everything is ready for release. This is a huge update and I wish not to rush the process. I'm only one guy and I'm doing my best to keep everyone happy with the product.

Wow, I'm hearing that a lot ?.

I don't offer discounts, I've always kept my price at $20. I believe $20 is the perfect price. Especially since I keep it updated and I'm always on top of the FUD life. I just can't wait for the next 5 updates and I'm sure I'll be getting a lot more people saying what you just said.

If you're interested in the next updates, visit the main website and take a look at the blog. I'm always updating the blog at least once a week to keep people updated with what we're doing.

2.0 is 1 year old, 2.5 is about 6+ months old, and 3.0 is little over 5 - 6 months old. 2.5 hasn't been cracked and I'm still waiting for it to be cracked, cause I wanna lawl ?. 3.0 is mostly server side, which means if anything happens I'm alerted right away. Not seeing what you're trying to say ?.

Highest I know someone getting is 35%.

Have questions? Add me on MSN firehunter93@live.com!

Theme changer, documentation, and tour will be done by Tuesday or even sooner. After that I'll be working on the cloner to make it more accurate. I'll be making a contact us page that will contain all the ways you can get support. Which will include Skype, MSN, Jabber, and a ticket system. A few more updates will be made to the website and free hosting will be worked on after that. By the time we have all that done, the next two features will be out. Taking another approach to this, which is to work on what needs to be done and building our way up until we hit our final updates.

By the middle of March everything will be done ?. Our price will remain the same, which is $20!

Our new product Conflagration is in the beta stages ?.

If you have any suggestion, ideas, or features we should add please feel free to contact me! This would be the perfect time!

Another thing, when we're done with everything. We have another surprise up our sleeve ?...

I'm not even getting all of the executions, I have received about 10 of the 31 executions in total. Not sure if it's if my server is FUD, but the JDB generator should be FUD to pretty much double check.

I'm sorry to tell you, but it is FUD and has only been FUD. It just depends on how you promote it ?.

Listen, I can edit the execution level if you'd like. I can make it so that once "Run" is it, it will count it as an execution or I can keep the way it is. Which would be honestly, it checks to see if the file was executed correctly before saying yes or no. Let me know if you'd like to to fake the stats, cause I have no problem doing that.

Nothing is 100% infection level, since BH and other exploit packs are as low as 17% and that's at 10k views.

Seriously this bagging on my product is starting to piss me off as I'm about to just close it, finish updates, and reopen. I'm trying the best I can to keep this product on a good standing note. Having to prove myself is not working out as many people who have used my service for YEARS know how this product works and how it can be used to its full potential.

Not to be rude or disrespectful in any way, but FoxyJava is geared to advanced users who have done this before. We're not geared toward new users. However, I'm trying my hardest to gear FoxyJava towards beginner level users. Having to continually reply to posts is not helping me achieve this goal as I do have other things on my mind such as how I'm suppose to pay $500 for rent next month when I just got done giving $1k to my family. I'm not asking for a support group and will not close my sales due to the stress, it is something I signed up for. However, I'd like to inform you on why things are the way they are.

If you don't understand that this is a one man show and surprisingly I'm some how keeping it above the water (thanks to many supportive customers) with everything else that is going on and believe I actually sit on my ass everyday doing nothing, than I'd have to say I'd rather not have you as a customer. I'm not saying I can't handle the stress, but I am saying please give me a little time to work with and you'll be surprised what will happen.

I've already completed some templates, dual infection, and other things that will be coming. To me, this is a wild accomplishment and I'm working on a lot of other things to keep YOU happy. I can be a total asshole and stick to my terms of service, which you agreed to:

Quote:We are not obligated to provide "Teamviewer" or any other form of remote support, nor do we have any obligation to respond to your e-mail, instant message, or private message within a certain time period; we are in no way inclined to respond instantly.

I can do this, but I don't. I also keep the product up-to-date the same day. It is FUD and has been FUD for a good two weeks. Some of the features that other competitors have I don't have cause I'm thinking of not just the longrun, but of you as well. Free hosting? I'm releasing that for beginners only and the consciousnesses they're going to face is something they signed up for, which I will explain when released. Cause my product at $20 and free hosting? What a good marketing tactic. Right? ?

All-in-all, I've been here before any other seller and know what it takes to keep this product running, FUD, and shitting out new features. I can honestly go on for days about Java Applets and how it began, how it works, and everything else about them. It is what I do and I'm proud of it. Rising this little project of mine to this is amazing stepping stone for me and I would have never guessed that my customer was going to be my competitor, but shit happens and I'm okay with that...

I'll reply to all your PMs by today, but what I'm asking for is just a little support from you.

The other reasons are that I can't get it working with my Sheikh crypter + when it is working the executions % are very low.

All the Java Applet does is download and execute. How is that people are getting above 35%, but others say they're having issues. I'd blame your crypter before the Java Applet, since the crypter comes first when executing your file.

Java Applet > Crypted File > Original File

Almost like downloading and running a file through Java, rather than a browser. Plus, I've heard a lot about Sheikh not working with Java Applets as much. Many people have the same problem, which is why I'd recommend doing research before blaming a product that works for various amount of other users.

I know my product works. I've tested it on XP & 7 and all browsers including IE8, IE9, Chrome, Opera, Safari, and Firefox. The file I tested with was a simple executable file, which would be Bintext. That file is not crypted and is not a virus, thus it is the perfect tool to test with.

No$ is what majority use as far as I know. Sheikh will work when double clicked on, but has issues with JDB for some reason. I'm sure you have 2.5, try it with that and let me know how it goes. Cause 3.0 and 2.5 are very similar as far as commands. If 2.5 does work, let me know and I'll take a look. If it doesn't, I've proven my point.

I dont think that you understand how javadriveby's work.

What it does, it downloads the file onto the operating system, and than executes it.

The only thing that could be the cause of this, is that your current crypter increases your file size drastically.

What you could do is post the file size of your server before crypting, and after.

You see what happens is that the driveby initiates the download, and the download stays active as long as the user is on the page.

Once he leaves the page the download is stopped.

So if the applet doesn't get enough time to finish the download, the file isn't executed.

So what you're saying is that the user HAS to stay on the site while the JDB is downloading?

With other words I have to make the crypted file so small as possible?

Well I'm the developer of Vuzia, which once was the #1 driveby on this site.

Got closed down for numerous reasons.

So I cant guarantee that foxy uses the same methods I used.

But when java is downloading a file, and a user closes the page, the process is terminated.

Thus ending the download process.

So yes, the smaller it is, the faster it executes, the higher infection rate you will have.

But like I said, foxy might do it differently.

Helped me out there a lot.

Once question, though.

Is there any point creating the server, then crypting it, then uploading it to the generator if the generator is already FUD?

You could just cut the crypting process out?

Is it executing and connecting when using your friends computers?

If not, then make sure when you've crypted the file, it hasn't corrupted it. If your crypter has a start-up option, then don't tick it, use the startup option on the Blackshades RAT as sometimes the crypters corrupt the server.

You do know dropbox does not scan, don't you? I have spoken to numerous staff members regarding this, not to mention the fact that they state "We do not scan your files for viruses" multiple times on their forums. Do you understand the sheer amount of resources it would take to scan every single file on dropbox? Even if they only scanned .exe files it would pull over 20x the amount of resources virustotal pulls. It just wouldn't make sense for them to scan your files, the only real thing to worry about is hitting your bandwidth limit.

Jhfire, when are these "New Updates" supposed to be released? You said they were coming out over a week ago.

Needs to press run.

Alright, update has been released ?. Dual infection is the only one that was added and templates will be out tomorrow, since I wanna add more than one template. The new method for dual infection, we're going to try out. If you have any issues with the new way that I've set it up let me know!

In required/main/ are your files you can change. Please leave the files in their current directories. If you want to add a smexy theme, just copy all the code in index.html, put it into the theme, and name that as the new index.html. Basically anything in that directory named index.html or index.php will be picked. Please don't have both as it will not like it.

Please let me know what you think ?.

If you're having issues with Dual Infection, uncheck it!

It uses a mixture of PHP and Javascript to determin if the user has Java installed. If the user doesn't have Java installed it will display a different page, rather than the Java Applet. This will result in a fake Flash Update page that has a "Security Warning".

(Mar 2, 2012 01:14 PM)UnNamedHacker Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Got a question

As of right now, that will be implanted after all the important updates have been released which include documentation, templates, dual infection, and theme changer. So far I have completed templates, dual infection, and theme changer. Documentation will be next and I'll be implanting the two new features next. After the two new features will be the DropBox API and another secret API that will be used to make your life easier as far as uploading.

We're also getting ready for the release of the worm, a runescape botnet, and while we're at it we will be adding an online scanner. However, these 3 things are coming in the later weeks as planned. March is the month FoxyJava is getting together! Everything is falling into place as planned.

If you're having issues, please let me know. Since I'll be doing a huge amount of updates, damn 0 might get deleted resulting in a tarded drive-by.

Everything is meashing together as planed, I just need some time to put it all together.

(Mar 2, 2012 03:24 PM)Toms1337 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) hey i have got a question, do people get free domains, or need to buy? ty

No, not at this time and this is why:

We will be offering them soon, once all updates have been done.

Quote:You'll need a place to host the JDB. Since AntiVirus are now detecting websites with malware and blocking them, this actually makes it faster for you to get detected and makes your infection rate go down dramatically. If we bought 30 domains and we have 500+ individuals running malware on these domains, it would get blocked faster. We would have reports from our hosting, get shutdown, and your product will basically be useless until we get it back up. Thus, it is really pointless for us as well as you to deal with this.

A lot of other sellers offer free hosting, but our experience is that it is best just to have you buy your own hosting. If you actually look through a lot of the threads of other sellers, you'll see that either they've had to move to a different hosting company, got shutdown, or are down for more than a week. We may have downtime, but the problems we're having with our hosting are actually not related to our product at all. As you can see, we are making backups of the website just in case it goes down. As well as backups, we're also going to be making an offline version.

It may be awesome at first to get free hosting, but in the long-run it really has an impact on you. Antivirus companies are getting smarter and faster at detecting malware. Staying under the radar is what we wanna do to keep our product online and available to you. Spending an extra $10 for a domain + hosting is not the worst thing in the world, since you'll be in control instead of us. By us offering you free hosting, we're in control and you have to rely on us. We want you to have the control, so we're not at fault when shit (excuse the language) hits the fan.

We really hope you understand how we're doing things, but we wanna keep the product online and healthy. We've already gotten our foxysoftware.com blocked by ESET, we really don't want to be shutdown. This is why we had to make the Java Drive-By not do call-backs to the main website, just for that reason and that reason only. Now that the Java Drive-By and the main website are separate, we can guarantee 100% up-time for the Java Drive-By.

An example of how the antivirus block the Java Drive-By would be:

1. Visitor goes to www.thisisnotavirus.com that contains a Java Drive-By.
2. After about 100 or so people get infected from that site, ESET or another antivirus block this site.
3. Now all customers are effected, cause that site got blocked and now the infection rate just decreased for everyone.

How do we know this? Well, our older version did call-backs to our main website and ESET caught on and decided to block <http://www.foxysoftware.com>, thus the Java Drive-By couldn't do a call-back to the site and would just shutdown due to the fact it couldn't get instructions from our website. It will get blocked, even if the Java Drive-By doesn't do call-backs. Why? Cause like stated above, antivirus companies do keep track of which sites their customers visit and are getting infected from.

Jagex is actually one of them that will report your site to your hosting for having a Java Drive-By posted on your site directed to Runescape players. This has happened many times and will continue to happen and there really is no way for us to block it, besides changing hosting. It doesn't mean Java Drive-By's aren't great spreading tools to use, cause they really are. You just need to be smart on how you're going to spread and how you're going to go about it. Don't get me wrong, there are a lot of different spreading methods out there and there are many different ways on how not to get caught.

I hope this answers your question and anyone elses questions on why we don't offer free hosting and why we will probably never will. Why pay another $5 just for a domain and hosting that is being sold to someone else, when you can pay $10 to get your own? I'd rather have my own domain and hosting, instead of relying on someone else. Thank you for reading and I really hope you learned a lot from my essay on why!

To make this easier, I'm going to implant a system that will allow you to choice which setup you want. Instead of having all the options infront of you, I think it would be a much better idea for you to select what kind of setup you would like. It will be much easier and I'm sure will be a great system for all of you. The documentation will follow the set up just like this and will be catagorized by the buttons.

The generator is crypted, which means the drive by is FUD. The only thing that's not FUD is your own personal file which needs to be crypted for it to fully work.

If you're on a budget, then go for CrypteX, but that has .NET dependencies so you will have to adjust that in BlackShades.

If you have some money to splash, go for Saddams crypter.

The website cloner will be fixed and templates will be released along with the new generator.

Looks like it makes perfect clones ?. I'll be adding an aggressive mode that will allow you to:

1. Scan the site and copy the main page.
 2. Scan the site and copy down the needed files attached.
 3. Scan the site and rape the shit out of every file ?.

if you dont know how to copy the codes in your own web site you probably shouldnt be doing this at all.

i really dont see how people get so confused about this.

and for free domain names use www.dot.tk works great for me i get about a 75% rate when my server is fud. its all about your spreading method on haveing people think your site is lijit and clicking run. not to hard to do with makeing a runescape site or a free web cam site and posting it in chat rooms. just be creative

I'm sure with some brain power, people would be able to do it. However, people have gotten to the point where they want something for nothing and want everything done for them. It is really simple, but I guess some people just don't have that brain power. Doesn't matter, things are changing and FoxyJava has been here for awhile. I see no competition anymore, compared to what is about to come out. I'm sure things will be a lot better ?.

If your adding all these features, then you should raise the price.

I'm not saying because I've got it at $20 you should but because so that you can make your moneys worth. The cost any updates and whatnot deserve a bit more income for the owner.

I'd check your crypter. Try running the JDB without a crypted file.

I did reply to your private messages. I said I would take care of it when I get home.

its also not working with out a crypted server, and yes my firewall + AV is off,

what am i doing wrong ?

Plomp - March 8, 2012, 8:52 am

It's not just you, it isn't working for me either.

I'm using a non crypted file on a PC with no firewall nor virusscanner.
I used the same settings before and it worked, but since yesterday it doesn't work anymore!
What's wrong with it then?

When entering the site where it is housed my exploit
I totally blocks the antivirus

here tests

If you're talking about Malware Bytes I'm going to be getting that fixed today. Since the update, I didn't get time to put that in since I had to re-do the main source.

Can you try a simple application such as Notepad or Calculator? Cause yesterday I had a customer that couldn't get it to work and I teamview him and resolved the issue. The issue was that his file was crypted wrong.

Leshy - March 8, 2012, 9:09 am

if your not busy atm jhfire,
I can show you over TV that the non crypted file isnt working.

gerardoxd - March 8, 2012, 9:16 am

We expect an update for today, for this FUD and I need to use the exploit thank you very much for the support
