Thread: Ways to learn VB.Net

?Demon - October 9, 2011, 12:35 am

I've seen lately there's been an influx of new VB.Net people without teachers who wish to learn. There are multiple ways to learn, such as:

Video tutorials:

www.thenewboston.com/

<http://www.youtube.com/user/TeachMeComputer>

If you'd like, there are many written tutorials looking around HF. What about sites like:

<http://www.java2s.com/Tutorial/VB/CatalogVB.htm>

Or maybe an Ebook? Look around the section, there's lots.

<http://www.onlinecomputerbooks.com/free-vb.net-books.php>

Or maybe you'd like to learn as you go along with tutorials and sources? How about stuff like:

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=1759634>

Why do I pick that tutorial? Not because it's my own, because it's a non-boring concept (a RAT) still teaching you basic things, you could mod it (as it's simple.) ,or write more (as the possibilities for commands are endless.) Or just use it as is.

You should use reference sites before asking questions on HF, ie Google.com

My advice to you guys it to keep trying hard, all the new learners. A lot of coding is about logic, the more you Google instead of asking on HF, the better you'll get! Good luck guys. (: Any questions or suggestions, feel free to post. ^.^

Good share, except for the links.

You should make them clickable. ?

Thank you, and sure, why not. =P I aimed for as easy to read as possible. The more tl;dr the less users will read it, and the more will miss out and continue to ask questions all the time.

Well, it helps people. That's all that really matters. =P If you'd like to elaborate what I need to explain, I can add it in.

And Anytime Cyber, plus you're never on MSN still. xD
