Thread: [\[Homework\] Cell Analogies?](#) [\[Homework\]](#)

Hey guy's in science I need to finish this project that's due tomorrow. You have to make a powerpoint presentation on cell analogies. You are suppose to make analogies with different parts of a cell with functions of everyday objects. So not how they look but how they function. I was hoping I could get some better suggestions and help with this. My partner isn't doing anything so i'm all by myself and was hoping I could get a hand from HF. This is what I have so far...The blank ones I haven't been able to think of yet

Vacuola - Is like a water bottle because vacuoles store water containing inorganic and organic molescules.

Lyosome- Is like garbage disposals because they break down waste materials and debris.

Centriole- Is like a medieval stretch torture device bcause it pulls chromosomes apart.

Nucleolus-

Microfilaments-

Microfilaments-

Microtubules-

Granum-

Nucleus-

Cell wall- A cell wall is like geletin it holds cells in place.

Chromatin- Chromatin is like a bullet proof vest it protects DNA

Cytoskeleton- Cytoskeleton is like a human skelton it protects whats inside.

Cila- Cilia is like a broom it sweeps bad stuff away

Flagella- Flagella is like a fish cause it uses its tail to move.

Chloroplast-

Stroma- Stroma is like a blanket covering your body.

Go to buyers bay and pay someone to make it completely for you :)

Or I guess you could just google the terms and see what they are and how they function?

Damn.. I remember doing this in school too! What was it.. freshman year?

But I'll work on it for you. I will get back to you when I'm done but I have to do some shit real quick.

PM me please.
