I totally agree with you mate. The XSS I've found in fusion tables, which is in beta stage, worth $1000. While the XSS in google image, worth only $500. Maybe they have their own ways of determining how much will it be. ?

I'm not kidding bro. Here's there email to me.

Quote:Hey Elvin

The panel has determined this bug didn't meet the threshold for a reward. It's what we refer to as a "self XSS" -- the only way a user can be compromised is if they copy/paste the exploit payload into the vulnerable field.

We did file a bug so would give credit, but you're already on the hall of fame for this quarter ;)

Cheers,
Adam

Quote:Hi Belmin

Congratulations! $1000 for this one.

I know that you reported some similar self XSS issues in past so there is some background info why we decided to reward for this one. The panel has discussed it and decided to reward it because it's on sensitive domain (accounts.google.com) and the payload can be passed using parameter.

Please let me know if you have any further questions.

Cheers,

Forgive me for this delay, but I'm very discrete with that kind of information. I don't say I don't trust you, but I think it's better to wait until everything is fixed. I hope you understand. ?

Ironically enough it took only a couple of hours to find that one. Been searching like a freak now, but I can't find another one. Anyways, I won't give up, it's fun! Just gotta be damn patient.. and creative. :P

Just show us some proof if it's really true or not. Hahaha. ?

Don't worry, took a screencap ofc! ;-) and made a videoclip with my mobile phone. That would be hard to fake, huh? :D

I will provide more information when this case is closed, if I'm allowed to do so. Otherwise I might popup in the hall of fame. I think that'd be enough evidence.

@ "S" third vulnerable link he found is : <https://www.google.com/voice/rates?p=>
Lets try <https://www.google.com/voice/rates?p=XSS>
we get our input inside script tag (view the source of page) :

<script>
var callingRatesPage = new _callingRatesPage(
'en',
'USD','XSS');
callingRatesPage.render(document.getElementById('calling-rates-page'));
</script>

You see the XSS that is our input , it is closed with '); , so his XSS payload was :
';alert("XSS by elvinguitar") ;</script> so lets review the source :

<script>
var callingRatesPage = new _callingRatesPage(
'en',
'USD',' '); alert("XSS by elvinguitar") ;</script>
callingRatesPage.render(document.getElementById('calling-rates-page'));
</script>

First he closed (escaped from the value) the _callingRatesPage value (callingRatesPage variable) with '); and added new alert("XSS by elvinguitar") ; Javascript event , and then closed the opened javascript tag <script> with </script> and since he is inside the javascript tag there was no need for opening <script> tag. That is what happened , in order to understand this fully you should have basic knowledge of Javascript and HTML :)

I'm reenabling his findings inside the lab environment for my paper on XSS attacks , i have reviewed and explained every XSS he found :) .My XSS findings are always on sites beneath 100 rank on Alexa , hope to find one on big sites like Google or Facebook , not for the money , just to put I love you Jovana on HoF :)

Will do, but the Google Security team is on holidays right now. ?

Btw, I won't get a reward for two of the four XSS'es because of several reasons that I will post here as soon as the bugs are fixed.

I can't find anything either now.. waiting for Google to release a new vulnerable product. ?

Me too! I can't find any more xss. You're too lucky bro! Maybe if I didn't take a break in finding xss, I'd be the one who found the xss you've found. Hehehe. ?

FastFive - January 1, 2012, 9:20 am were those all persistant? man you are a lucky guy or genius

I found three persistent XSS'es in total, and I might get a reward for two of them (the other one was a persistent self-XSS).

I also found another one, but that was an useless self XSS. I will create a topic covering those exploits as soon as I get permission from Google to disclose them.

FastFive - January 1, 2012, 3:04 pm

0x i look forward to reading that.... if i hacked google i wouldnt care about a reward just getting on the "hall of fame" is the best thing you can put on your resume for a career in web security or some shit

Pillows - January 1, 2012, 3:08 pm

Ahhh I'm like on a dry spell or something. I can't find anything on Google (except for a possible CSRF but I'll leave that for later.) XSS-related.

?Can't find anything either.

And the Security Team is on holidays right now, so still no new information / permission to disclose it.

E: elvinguitar, you haven't found my XSS'es yet?

E2: Actually, FastFive, I already got a job (as a student) that covers Web Security. :-)

Yeah! I don't have any new XSS. ? besides, it's now the resume of our class, so I don't have time to find XSS. I need to focus on my studies especially there are upcoming quiz bees. ?

FastFive - January 2, 2012, 3:08 pm

how long did it take to find these? i looked for 2 days so far, no luck. or maybe i just suck as hacking (Jan 2, 2012 04:08 PM)FastFive Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) how long did it take to find these? i looked for 2 days so far, no luck. or maybe i just suck as hackingI found mine in three days.

I started in the evening, it took about 2-3 hours to find a persistent XSS.

The following morning, I found two. It took 3-4 hours to find those. (Not eligible for a reward)

And I found the last persistent one on the third day, after about 4 hours (maybe 5 with a pause).

Then I've been searching for two days, I couldn't find anything. :-(

The panel will discuss tomorrow whether I'll get a reward for one of those two XSS'es that may be eligible for a reward or not. Exiting, but my hopes aren't too high. I'll keep you guys updated.

By the way, it's indeed impossible to find an SQL injection in Google's system. Their database won't allow that.
