Thread: Any one want/need an email harvester/crawler/finder?

Systematic - February 1, 2012, 3:44 pm

I'm currently working on an ADVANCED email harvester/crawler/finder. I was wondering how many people actually want on or need one? I also want your opinions. I need to know if i should continue production. If you do want/need one how much are you willing to pay? I'm thinking like $0-5. Trust me, this will have tones of features and settings.

PS if you have any ideas for it, I would love to hear them!

Yes, but blackhats can sell the emails for money or send viruses to those people... the possibilities are endless.

Thank you is two words, you need a space after the comma and a period no just a random parenthesis!

Im not selling this just yet... Read my original post and you'll see that all i want are opinions.

Any one have an idea on what the final pricing should be?

Just to mention that web is full of email extractor but the problem is most of those email harvester useless for us all because you need to figure out that some extractor generates fake email addresses , so what i mean is all what you can get from extractors online is 5% OF working emails

the rest is generated by a random software that google use to combat spammers botnet herders and virus creators , i mean most of those softwares extracts from google because this company is well used by worldwide users , i suggest you to purchase email list from trusted companies or use aN RDP to scan for mailling list so those random google softwares can't trace your banned IP and generate you fake email list / CONTACT EXPRESS / TARANTULLA / TWO good companies i used to work with their software they provide very good list with LIVE users.

That's why this one will have proxy list support, user agent list support and you will be able to enter the url of the website to crawl on.

How don't you have the Grammar Nazi award yet? :)

Anyway, OP, €0 - €5 seems to be a fair.

I think other people would buy it for sure. :)

EDIT: Sorry, didn't saw thread date.
