Thread: Post/Delete to Bump

Omniscient - March 8, 2012, 8:52 am

It's become apparent these past few weeks that a few sellers are using a method to their threads. It involves making a LQP and then deleting it to the thread.

Staff can see the activity of a thread. We see when this occurs. More and more it's becoming more of a problem.

Anyone using this method to their threads will get an LQP warning and have their threads closed. If this continues then more drastic action like rep fucks or bans will occur.

I hope I'm clear on this.

This is a nice post, good job there Omni.

Yea, i have also seen members doing this.

Its good that you are giving out LQP warning for this.

Good job.

This should lessen it a bit for the people that did it excessive, forcing the others to do it too.

iNk. - March 8, 2012, 8:59 am

why don't you just remove the ability of UB3R's and L33ts being able to delete their posts

Isaac Newton - March 8, 2012, 9:00 am

Sometimes, instead of making a new LQP, they delete the last reply and repost it as new reply.

Also, is this rule limited to marketplace or other sections aswell?

Sol Yurick - March 8, 2012, 9:01 am

Glad to see a thread made about this :). I think I know why ;). Thanks.

Smyly - March 8, 2012, 9:02 am

I haven't seen this done, but thanks for informing us Omni.
I appreciate it.

Omniscient - March 8, 2012, 9:04 am

Quote:This should lessen it a bit for the people that did it excessive, forcing the others to do it too.

And I think that's exactly what's happening. It was never a problem up till about last month. Once the method gets known then it spreads like wildfire. Amazing the problems that pop up on this site. What was never an issue 3 months ago is now a real problem. Ugh. Just another day on HF.

Quote:why don't you just remove the ability of UB3R's and L33ts being able to delete their posts

That would be excessive. I think just letting sellers know they can't do this is enough.

And FYI if a non-thread starter is doing this maybe as a silent partner...that's gonna piss me off a lot and I'll ban the person making the post/delete s.

Quote:Sometimes, instead of making a new LQP, they delete the last reply and repost it as new reply.

Also, is this rule limited to marketplace or other sections aswell?

I think this all falls under our LQP posting etiquette guidelines for the entire forum but so far this issue has been limited to the Marketplace.

Sol Yurick - March 8, 2012, 9:05 am

Quick question once you close the thread, are the sellers allowed to go make a new thread?

Paradoxum - March 8, 2012, 9:05 am

What if the posts aren't low in quality? I mean, I just deleted a bunch of posts I made for I did not want my post count to increase because of this section. Oftentimes I quote new posters on the thread, copy the previous post I made, and then post it. The older one gets deleted, of course. Is this against the rule?

▣ Nick™ ▣ - March 8, 2012, 9:07 am

Another quick question. What if it's not a LQP used to raise the thread, instead a HQP is made? Or, if we think it may be LQ, can we PM a mentor or staff member to see if the post is okay?

What if the post made isn't low quality?

Say, for example, I make a post. Nobody replies to it or makes a post in the thread within, say, 24 hours. Would it be breaking this rule to delete the post I had made and repost it?

Indeed, I have the same query. My problem is that I try to answer every question I can in one post therefore I delete the previous one I made instead of having two posts.

Actually his Question is different.

Your case is valid as you're, in a way, just editing your post and adding new content to it which is not to ump the thread(but it does and will do even if you don't delete the previous post and make a new one).

And he is asking if he can just delete the (his)last reply and repost it just to ump the thread, which I guess will be violation of this rule.

Just my guess.

Not true. The general audience for the marketplace here appears to be people who are primarily interested in booters.

Well I have been punished before the rule was made. Without any warning like omni did now by creating the thread. And I lost my thread with 40 pages and all vouches. And admins said to me this was fine some weeks ago. It is cool :) This proves the bad communication that existed on this.

It effected me. I had 1.7k posts and 170 pages worth. Out of all honestly and not to be disrespectful, but it can't be our fault MyBB can't write a simple MySQL rule. We should at least be given a warning about it and after 24 hours if it continues our thread gets closed. Cause I mean, 2 hours of the new rule being enforced? It's not just you. And I've been warning and closing threads for weeks on this. Today it's official and I'm making a public post that I want this activity to stop.

You know you were doing it to bu-mp (damn filters) your posts. That's crap. Anytime you think you're gonna game HF you take the risk of getting caught. Use common sense.

And I don't care if the post itself was high quality. No one should be attempting to bu-mp their threads with tricks, friends, or some obscure technique not even thought up yet. It's just not right.

I tried to set the marketplace to default sort by thread creation date but that was a bit of a disaster. However I may be forced to do it again. What that means is that it will be impossible to bu-mp your thread and when the forum will be sorted by thread creation date. A post 2 days old will probably be on page 5 no matter how many replies it go.

Does anyone want that? I doubt it so knock off the nonsense. You really don't want to decide this is a larger problem and working on more drastic solutions.

EDIT: Yes I know this post has grammar and typo problems. Don't PM me about it. I don't have a lot of time to edit my posts. Just typing away.

How about a system that shows threads with the MOST posts at the top? Meh, I dunno, just an idea.

BlackHops - March 8, 2012, 12:34 pm

This was actually a problem, good to know it's being addressed. Also good that there was just a rule made than something like removing the ability to delete your own posts.

(Mar 8, 2012 12:29 PM)CarrotMilk Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) How about a system that shows threads with the MOST posts at the top? Meh, I dunno, just an idea.

If a thread is truly popular and has a lot of posts then it will keep getting a high volume of posts, keeping it at the top where it belongs or close to it until interest goes down and the post frequency drops and it doesn't stay at the top anymore.

The system works fine naturally.

I prefer not to create a plugin for something like this but I will if I have to. I could realistically check for forum id in the marketplace and then check a threads logs for actions and then limit the amount of delete posts in the thread. But I don't want to deal with that. If you were to write a plugin for this.

Just make the remove tool for the poster, not really remove the post, just make it "hidden" to everyone.

Give staff the possibility to just hit a button to display "removed" posts.

Than they can quickly see if the op has been removing and adding is posts real easy.

Just my 2 cents.

I tend to check crypter threads usually in marketplace. Sometimes there is at least one user that just deletes his last post and then simply reposts the exact same to be on top (not any change to his posts...) and until now didn't think of reporting anything. I see the point here and good to see that rule implemented.

What about of you actually have something to say, then you're the last post... So you quick edit copy it, delete an repost. Same consequences?

I've done this before but only because I was the last post and I was adding information and wanted people to know about updates to the thread; I didn't want to double post. It wasn't marketplace though. I'll stop now that I know this isn't allowed.

mDopeyk - March 11, 2012, 12:08 pm

If mybb lets you set that ability for specific section and in our case marketplace, then why not.

What if we see someone doing this a lot in a section, can we report it somehow? It makes it even more annoying because I have competing sales with people I see doing it. It's truly not fair.

Super Scumbag - March 26, 2012, 7:19 pm

I think with this rule, that there needs to be some form of distribution of how the marketplace is ran. Its completely overran with booters, and crypters.

I think maybe there should be separate forums for booters/stressers, and crypters.

It would greatly help how the market flows, and allow people to not have to bu-mp their threads.

Kotei - March 26, 2012, 9:32 pm

This is not fair for all sections, perhaps the Marketplace, but even then, kinda bummed out because I got L33T in order to be able to delete my own threads/posts.
