Thread: Verify Gmail accounts without phone activation or Gmail creator Worth selling?

Anne - March 21, 2012, 6:35 pm

Hey,

So I just found a way to exploit a feature in Gmail, in order to bypass the phone activation when you create accounts.

It is repeatable, easy and can be automated.

I am not sure if I am willing to share it though, but would anyone be interested in such a method, and how much would this hypothetically be worth if I began selling it?

I could possibly also make a Gmail account creator. How about that?

I don't know about selling the method on how to do it would be any good, but the Gmail account creator? That would go far!

Hmm thank you for your response.

I will consider the creator.

My programming skills are however not very strong.

The guy who rented my signature is selling his Gmail/Youtube creator I think.

any gmail account is actually worth selling

Could most likely get around $200 a copy for it since that people could make thousands of emails for YouTube and stuff like that.

This is more than worth selling. You'd make more selling accounts, though.

Is this the method with adwords? Just wondering...because it still works, so idk why people would pay 200$ for ur method, when they can use adwords method for free ^^

You could open a simple service or something maybe. But I doubt it'll sell for much.
