..Misleading forum name caught my eye, I'm not sure if you're going to attract the audience you are looking for. >_<

Good luck anyway.

No (personal) offence at all, just giving out critique.

- only 48 of 76 threads are content, the rest is general talk.
- No self-customized theme although this is not that important as long as it's not a default theme.
- You don't need any staff other then yourself since the community is still small
- What does your forum offer that HackForums does not? All the sections can be found here, and paying for premium on HF will grant you more features than becoming premium on BentForums.
- "I worked Really Hard on this thread so Join bentforums" Like we care? Visitors and members want HQ content, they don't need to know howmuch work and/or time you've put in it. Actually, I'd like to know what kind of hard work there was?

- Just started and not even moderating the forum? I see a question under the Tuts&Guides section in Computing, ("Post your tutorials and guides related to computing here.") it's not a tut or guide so it should be posted in a Troubleshooting or Questions section which you don't have.
- Notice your spelling and grammar, as an admin I wouldn't advice you to write "ur" or "Experianced", for example.

I could tell more, but I think this is enough so far, and keep in mind, it's pure critique, nothing personal at all.
