cause u said it sure was.Yes because in my previous post, I told you that this account does not exist but we posted in same time, then when you replied, I said if the username changed, it was sure that you were infected.

All we can do is tell you to read the help documents.

We encourage you to make a new account. Please use the format "UID_temp" or "USERNAME_temp" as the username. UID will be your userid which you can obtain in url from the profile. Username might be changed but if you can't find your UID then please use it.

We will match your new account IP to your old account. If a match exists, it will make it easier to help you recover your account. Be sure to use a secured email to signup and confirm your new account. We will use your new account email to replace your old account, and then we will send you a password recovery email. Your new account will be merged into the old account.

Do not attempt to recover your account until you've secured your computer and email accounts.

The next thing you should do is use the contact form, and choose "Stolen Account" for a subject. Provide as much detail as you can. If the staff discovers your account was compromised, it will be banned to prevent damage to the account and scams.

Be prepared to provide evidence. Location
