

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Intentions Questionnaire for new posters in the Hacking section.

Ted - August 29, 2012, 5:05 am

I have been on Hackforums for a few years now, and I may have not posted that many times, but believe me, I know these forums.

A problem I noticed back when I joined and also recently, was that there is so many new members to these forums who sign up because they intend to "hack" maybe 1 person, or do something absolutely ridiculous and impossible.

I have seen so many threads saying stuff like "cud any1 hack dis guy 4 me plzz i rlly need this 2 be dun fast!" in the Beginner Hacking section and Hacking Tutorials section as well, and usually this is the only post the user has made on Hackforums.

The problem is that these kids who sign up don't want to learn how to hack for real. They have been brainwashed by all the fake Hacking videos on Youtube and they think that it is as simple as downloading a "Hacking Tool" and entering in a victims Username or something.

On certain occasions I have been browsing through my RAT victims and spied on their desktop to find them doing ridiculously stupid things like trying to hack people's Facebook accounts with Command Prompt, whilst watching a Youtube video explaining how to change the passwords of USER ACCOUNTs on the same computer. I have also seen one of my other RAT victims sign up on this website then download Cyber-gate RAT, then as soon as his Anti-virus detected it he went insane deleting it and running Spybot search and destroy and some other strange "Anti-Viruses" I had never seen before. The next day he was back on Youtube again searching for "Ultimate Runescape Account Hacking Tool Pro" or something similar. The stupidity never seems to end.

So an Idea which may help to improve the Quality and seriousness of the discussions and posts on these forums would be to make New users go through a Questionnaire upon first viewing the Hacking section, testing them of their intentions and what they wish to gain from this site, because from what I understand, many new users sign up here believing that they can hack all of their friend's Minecraft accounts in a matter of minutes, then leave the site after an hour as an Ub3r L33t H4x0r and never come back.

This should hopefully deter people with bad intentions away and improve the quality of the community and discussions in the Hacking section. Just a suggestion, tell me what you guys think :)

'Cody - August 29, 2012, 7:28 am

Not sure if I agree with the idea or not, but it more than likely will never happen. If you've yet to notice, this is not a forum that only revolves around hacking, and not everyone joins the forum with hacking intentions. The lounge is a very active section and always will be, as well as the marketplace. Having each new user go through this would be a pain. The requests for hacking section and beginners hacking sections are for people to learn, if they come here believing clicking a button will hack someone, hopefully they'll learn from others that it is not that simple and will actually know better.

adampelletgun - August 29, 2012, 7:31 am

This isn't just a hacking site so i don't see a need for this.

