Hi Forum

James from LOUDSOUNDMOVIES here,

Some of you may have seen my av tutorials in the past on my youtube account, well now i have released a new one, this one is a paid av tutorial but for the price you get ALOT of stuff, not only a full 1.13 million virus signatures but...

Video

- Behaviour blocker
- Perfect file deletion code
- Multi-threaded scanner
- Massivly optimized cpu usage
- Massivly optimized scanner speed
- Virus details
- User Defined settings
- Log Files
- Full Scan :)
- Pause scanner on the fly
- scanner file size settings and priority settings
- Optimized Real Time Scanner
- Flawless file deletion
- Self Defence to defend from the AV from being disabled by a virus
- and alot more :)

Send me a PM on YOUTUBE if you are interested in purchasing it.

The full price is $250 AUS, with that is any source code updates, fully commented code, skype assistance at any time and personal requests :)

15 posts, 1 rep, trying to sell a "anti-virus" coded in .NET.

Sure, that's believable.

tweety - September 11, 2012, 2:59 pm

Is it made in .NET? If it won't compare to anything in the market because most AV's are in kernel mode.

Professional my ass. I saw you're video, you're using timers you fucking retard. If you had any knowledge at all, you'd be using threads.

So let me get this straight... You're teaching users on Youtube how to make an antivirus, which is BEYOND simple, yet you think that by using timers it will be easier for them to understand...

You must be more retarded than I thought.

If you read my post correctly you fucking retard I said BEYOND simple... You must not understand English because I wasn't calling it simple.

Besides, you're probably too retarded to code one too. That tutorial is probably just a giant pile of shit waiting for someone to step on it.

Just because you code in 3 other languages doesn't make you a 'professional'. I'm sorry but you're the one that needs to get the fuck out. Also, if you haven't noticed, I've used good grammar in all my sentences while you use shortened versions. Now who looks like the one who failed English?

If you have a problem with it, reply with respect. There is no reason to bring out profanity or call someone a "retard". That's the problem with this generation. Respect has been lost.

Also, no matter how good you think you are, there is always someone out there better who can call you a retard.

I agree, I have tested methods of hexadecimal scanning, and it's quite more effective in detection rate rather than hashes. I have been experimenting on writing a scanner, it's proven to be quite difficult when going into speed and detection rates. Speed is the one thing that kills me right now, because if your hex definitions are all different sizes, then your scanning speeds will be greatly decreased. MD5 hashes are actually slower in scanning than hex, believe it or not. (Smaller files < 10MB).

No but really OP do you not understand how stupid and pointless it is to use MD5 detections? I could change 1 byte on a file that has been detected and it would be undetected. I would not even need a crypter to elude your av. Just a file pumper lol. You should just quit wasting your time on this because it is not use full.

kram7750 - August 10, 2014, 11:29 am

This thread, very old indeed... However, after skinning through it and laughing very hard at some of the stupid, arrogant and abusive posts I have to set some of you (the dumb ones) straight because they clearly know nothing about malware. ?

Firstly, yes, a Antivirus which is not running in ring0 (yes, that's kernel level/mode) is vulnerable to threats like rootkits especially, a few days ago I analysed a malware sample which managed to shutdown Emsisoft. When Emsisoft came back up, all the protection shields had been properly disabled and damaged therefore it could not work however many times you turned it back on. As far as im aware, Emsisoft Internet Security v9 is running in kernel mode, or it should be at least. It was disabled running in ring0 with process protection. Right. So there you have it with that one. Stop having a go at the OP (or how you were a long time ago it looks) unless you can make a Antivirus or even a project in .NET which can protect itself from a FUD which VirusTotal and the other vendors had have never even seen before... You guys really make me laugh. ? ?

Secondly, so many posts about spelling. All of you, shut up. By looking at most points in this forum, most of them have incorrect grammar (punctuation, spelling). I'm going to aim this one at the dumb ones on the forum who have been flamming the OP, because they are clearly the dumbest. As for the others, just forget this point. You actually spoke some intelligence so whether your spelling was correct or not, your not stupid :)

Thirdly, a hash based engine is, no, not very good. Even I can admit that, however, even Emsisoft and many other vendors are hash based. In fact, ALL/MOST of the popular, well-known and always-used vendors use signatures. However, they also have Heuristics, Behaviour Blockers and so on. But, they also have signature based engines. So again, shut up. As long as you update the database very frequently with the latest threats, it should be fine. Of course it won't detect FUD's or day0 unless added to the real-time without a very good behaviour blocker and Heuristics... BUT IT'S A START WHEN YOUR CREATING A NEW ANTI-MALWARE PRODUCT/COMPANY. Honeslty, for a freelancer who has been doing .NET for awhile, what do you expect? The next Malwarebytes? Oh please, just shhh... Obviously nowadays the hashes would be worthless simply because it's 2 years later or about that and day0 hashes are now worth it... I've collected all the recent day0 malwares for awhile now. Is it worth something? Yes, but it depends on different factors from the exact date and so on.

Yes, you can change the hash of the file very easily. That is true.
A lot, or even all of you have probably never analysed malware in your life, nor know anyone who does. I know a lot of people who create the malware packs for various security websites.

For a .NET project you guys really take it on... If your not looking for a hash based engine, what are you asking for? The next malwarebyte's? Hooking into applications and preventing code injecting to other processes? For that you will be looking into at least C/C++, even Assembly... Same goes for rootkit detection. I mean, yes the OP could have added more things in like registry run entry checking, however honestly, if you really need to pay money to learn to check when a entry in a registry key is changed/created/removed then you really need to go back and learn VB from the start. Once you learn how to use the registry it really isn't that hard.

Some of you say that using timers in professional applications is bad. Whoever said that, stop talking out your ass. There are products that use timers, there are real products developed in VB which use threads. In fact, there are some that use both. Who cares? As long as it's nice and efficient and is good on the RAM usage, as well as doing what the product is meant to do WELL, why does it matter? I use timers and threads in .NET and then threads in C/C++ application development. Again, who cares? ?

One of the people in this forum mentioned about a word document being a virus. You haven't done your research, have you? A executable file extension could be changed from a PE file (for anyone who again, hasn't done they're research, that's a .exe), can be modified and changed to a .doc or any other Office format. In fact, any OTHER format. Then, there could be another file which is launched or creates a new entry in the registry which runs on startup which changes the extension of that file back to *.exe and runs it. Wait, even better, how about it creates a copy of that .doc file to another location, put's it hidden from the user, changes the filename to something they won't search and then changes the format to *.exe. Then starts that application into memory. What then? Even this Antivirus tutorial would help if the hash of that document had been added to the database. Sometimes behaviour blockers can fail and real-time can help. Sometimes the real-time protection can fail and the behaviour blocker won't, which is usually what happens in most cases. Wait again! A better explanation... A executable could be infected and drop a .dll which does all the work... Even better! ?

Another guy admitted he couldn't code and then said he could code...? Make your mind up. You either can or can't.

The OP is a SINGLE developer who did all of it in, actually a short amount of time. Yes, I've spoken with the OP before. Some trolls shut his YouTube down. Now, i'm not trying to point the finger but after reading this thread... *cough cough. I wonder who it could be? ?

This next message is for someone called... Mavamarteen? I'm not going back the thread pages to check...

--- Yes, you may know GDI+. Yes, you may be experienced in GDI+ and VB coding, but do you really have to go on about how you did? I saw a rep to the OP about how he was acting like a "dick". No, your acting like the dick unless you can make something better and prove it. Honestly, no one cares if you know GDI+. Without Aeonhack you have nothing because you use his theme bases! Funny that... ? ? ? ?

And the next part is too everyone on this thread who has spoken complete rubbish:

Unless you can code something of better value, and can prove it... Shut up and go away, and good luck with your Programming career because trust me, they will somehow find you were on this thread and what you have been saying. They always do. ?

Sorry, this really had nothing to do with me but somebody has to set the dumb, arrogant, abusive, useless guys on this thread straight. And, after actually having conversations with the OP in the past, WHEN I FIRST STARTED PROGRAMMING 2 years ago, I just had to come and help him here, even 2 years later. I don't even know how I found this, I was searching about a C++ class. ?

So go on, make a better one than the OP even 2 years later. IT'S 2 YEARS LATER AND I STILL WANT TO SEE YOU MAKE A BETTER ONE, because I doubt you can and until I see it I won't believe it. ?

Is there anything else the dumb people on this thread need explaining? Anything else you are too dumb to research properly? ?

Thank you.

No but really OP do you not understand how stupid and pointless it is to use MD5 detections? I could change 1 byte on a file that has been detected and it would be undetected. I would not even need a crypter to elude your av. Just a file pumper lol. You should just quit wasting your time on this because it is not use full. You realize the other vendors use Signature-based engines for detections like Real-Time etc, right? Yes, they have Heuristics/Behaviour Blockers etc, but they also use signature detection (ones like Emsisoft, Avast will too etc). Guess what, the ones doing that WITH behaviour blockers and heuristics of course, get the best awards.

Actually, apart from the signature based engine, you could just make a feature in the behaviour blocker to look for new encrypted, hidden files etc. Lots of vendors do that to find crypters.

He could make weight based heuristics and make the behavioural hook into apps and check if they are logging keys etc which is a good feature and hard to do but if you do it right you get good results.

Some of the best Anti-Malware/Anti-Virus vendors don't detect file pumped files, if so, newly pumped files where it's signature isn't added yet as it's day0.

You should just quit wasting your time on this because you probably know nothing about malware nor know how to make a project even near as good as the one the OP made... :D

Fight Fight Fight!
Kiss Kiss Kiss!

Everyone is going ape on everyone. Thanks, I enjoyed reading your thread..

Should this be in the market place as your selling a product rather than releasing it?

Eternal. - August 16, 2014, 3:09 pm

I definitely do not see this selling at this price.

?lixir - August 16, 2014, 3:13 pm

@Eternal. the thread is two years old mate. Though, the guy who ed it does have a point.

@OP

What did you check the check the signatures and applications with?

I am affraid MD5 wouldn't be enough...

Server97 - August 18, 2014, 3:50 am seriously tho, 250 dollars for a antivirus coded in vb.net?? wouldn't you just buy malwarebytes premium or something?

I do, and don't agree. I guess the OP wanted to make money, however, it was meant for people who wanted to learn how to make a Antivirus.

Personally, I use a mix of C/C++ and .NET but it takes a lot of API calls, especially for protecting processes (and a service, hooking of the TerminateProcess()), behavioural detection with weight and behaviour based (heuristics)...

Of course the source doesn't contain Heuristics, but it's a start to a behaviour blocker and yes it could have been improved and yes it would be cheaper just to purchase a AV but then there are those "beginners" who want to jump to AV development but have no idea so they go and buy a source to get started. I don't think they should be making one at all if they are a beginner, or anything similar as it takes great knowledge with the Windows API/Kernel functions and advanced knowledge on malware detection/analysis and removal but... Whatever lol.

There are many sites to get MD5 Hashes from. But you must update them reguarly.

Some:

isthisfilesafe.com (by Emsisoft Anti-Malware developers)

virustotal.com (by Google)

malc0de.com/database

vxvault (siri....vxvault...)

virsign

virusshare
