What he said. Also, will it show up as the number or as the name of the contact with that number?

If you send an SMS to a number from for example 123456789, if the person reply, he will reply to 123456789. If the person has the number saved on his contacts, it will see the name of the person associated to that number.

No, you don't need nothing. You don't have to associate nothing with it!

JulioRoderig - October 25, 2012, 12:01 pm

k, because I am looking for something like this. I am looking to see if any other services exist like this or if theres a free app on the iphone like this before I buy Code mail("1112223333@provider.net", "", "does it wwork anything like this ",

"From:1234567890@provider.net);

my question is so it doesn't use sms gateways correct? And global right. And are there any tos regulations when sending text messages.

and does this spoof the sender too. Not the sender name but the sending number.

First off, am your die hard fan GrOwlit :) you really helped a lot to make this community a better place :)... Had a question regarding the SMS spoofer, does this work in India? As per the regulations, there is a limit on the senderID of 8 characters, hence, spoofing is a challenge here... Tried most of the sites but doesn't work.. Will this?

Hey.. Just saw your above post, ignore my question...
