You should probably mention that this is not automatic.

redpois0n - December 22, 2012, 6:59 am

Is this automatic that you will get the file from site directly or have to wait?

SelfIdentify - December 22, 2012, 7:08 am

You don't get the file instantly, because after crypting, i test and scan the file before sending it

You coded a crypter, but you don't know how to use automated script to crypt the file ?

Obviously not he's testing if the file works so the user won't waste money (well thats what I'm thinking could be wrong)

But you should mention with that your crypter works so you can send the file right after the user paid :)

OP contacted me regarding advertising his crypter on Element Scanner.

I did a test crypt that day, it was FUD, stayed FUD for 2-3 days (I did not distribute).

Crypted again on the 24th, it was 2/35 this morning when I checked.

FUD time isn't the best, but the crypts are indeed FUD on delivery. Vouch.

Not sure exactly if a C++ crypt is worth $5.. but people seem to use this service so i guess it is! Nice job at creating a crypting service that people feel they want to pay a premium for :)

C++ is the best kind of crypt?

On a side note.

I will defiantly be using this service in the future. Pay per crypt is always a better idea than a lifetime license, that way the coder has a steady income and doesn't ditch the project.

I'd pay $10 a crypt easily, and serious users would pay $20 a crypt just as easily. Just because it's out of your price range or this is over your head, does not mean its a bad deal or a rip off.

Selfidentify - January 3, 2013, 7:19 am

The domain name was suspended by the registrar.

They claim i was spreading virus and spam from there, which is a very big lie.

I don't even have a mail server and also, all processed files are encrypted with a password.

Persistent request for evidence fails. They could not provide me with even a single copy of a spam message.

BTW, i'm working to take it back, but it is so unprofessional for big companies like my registrar to be so unfair to their customers.
