The alpha version of the China-exclusive Call of Duty Online is now live. Unfortunately, the monetization systems for the game are currently unavailable in the current form, but the game itself is playable across the region.

Activision announced Call of Duty Online last year, and has paired itself with the Chinese investment holdings firm Tencent. Tencent currently offers social networks, e-commerce, and multiplayer online games within the country.

This is pretty old. It's only happening to them because video game consoles are banned in china.

yea tht sucks for them Call of duty is a good game for evrybody and how do u sell space for money cause i would like to do that

Arm4L1t3 - January 16, 2013, 5:56 pm

Just looks like MW2 with EVEN WORSE graphics than normal

The game is horrible. Same engine for hod knows how long. (Since CoD2?) Plus, nothing new in each game. You chase a bad guy and a bad plot leads to another.

I laugh at idiots who still buy this POS called a game. The developers and Publishers don't care in the slightest about their fans or community, but only money.

Get real.

Wow, that sucks, call of duty is really an awesome game to play when you are tired or just want something to do.

It's an old habit and it sucks really.

I hate cod now. Battlefield 3 premium is were it's at. COD is children's war compared to Battlefield 3.

Get real.I agree totally. I feel that each game is almost exactly the same, except for a few minor differences such as changing the name.
