Well why would you want to trade with a person with 1 post anyway?

Cabin Fever - March 19, 2010, 12:59 am

Who had one post? they both had fairly decent rep and HF L33t.

Oh I see what you mean I read the title and thought you got scammed by users with 1 post.

Might wanna blurr out the name on paypal. Could be seen as posting personal information.

Cabin Fever - March 19, 2010, 1:25 am

He's a scammer that's what scammers get I guess.

Bill Nye. - March 19, 2010, 1:30 am

Just because someone breaks rules doesn't mean you get to. :P

Cabin Fever - March 19, 2010, 1:32 am

I don't think anyone will have a problem with it, if someone asks me to take it out I will, but I strongly dislike uploading pics and all that nonsense, and on that note, I will no go to sleep knowing that they can't do shit with they money now that I've chargebacked it :D

Wouldn't be his real name. If you were to scam someone would you honestly use your real paypal or real name?

Also Phlegethon, consider this: If you get scammed you lose something, if you don't trade you lose nothing.

If the person seems just a bit fishy, don't trade. Anyone could be a scammer, anyone has the ability to be one. So if you don't trust them, then just don't trade.

To clarify it is perfectly fine to post someones name. The parts that are against the rules are posting address's/phonenumbers and everything else to actually locate someone. The name really doesn't do that much considering the fact that there is probably another 1000 people with that same exact name in the world.

Cabin Fever - March 21, 2010, 10:46 am

I also love how the kid who scammed me neutral repped me calling me a scammer LMAO

I love the threadname but is this the entertaining scam section or the informative one? Good luck on getting this one solved.
