Just as the Durango news is dying down an Orbis has appeared on Ebay. Starting at $50.00 USD, after 54 bids and nearly 5 days it has just broken $10,000 USD.

Unable to confirm if this is real, due to Sony not releasing full specs about the retail version or the developer version. Everything we have learned from the Sony 2013 Press Conference seems to be checking out with this listing.

Images of the controller, specifications, and the actual name of the unit are all accurate from what we have been told and shown. This listing also includes a never before seen image of what is labeled as the Playstation 4. It looks very modern and similar style as the WiiU, which was recently released by Nintendo. The memory which is matching up at 8gb, and the x86 GPU aren't enough to confirm it, however the rest of the specifications the user has listed are so detailed it makes you wonder.

Around this time Sony already has launch titles ready from what we seen at the conference, which means to see a demo unit pop up around this time wouldn't be that unbelievable.

The the listed specs the user has provided can be found at the bottom, along with the Ebay posting.

This 4 Sony Playstation is intended for developers and testers, the new gaming console!

its going for 10 grand, thats crazy. I'm going to laugh when its a fake one and the person got ripped off.

PhehnoM - February 26, 2013, 5:08 am

This will def. hit 20k+ when the bid ends, just like the new xbox dev. kit.

hex0. - February 26, 2013, 5:16 am same guy is selling the new google glasses, and he's from Russia. Big LOLz

Tyler? - February 26, 2013, 11:12 am

I'm calling bullshit just like with the 360 kits. Fake until proven real.

EDIT: Now that I think about it, why would Sony let this happen? I doubt they would.
