

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Lots of interesting problems about Facebook hacking, after actual Facebook hacking

Low Ryder 2005 - March 20, 2013, 6:52 pm

All right, I've been able to hack some FBs and I thought everything was fine, before encountering some problems which I thought someone a little more expert could clear up for me.

Note: I use a proxy (namely Spotflux) for this, and it uses a server in another continent from which I live, lol

First interesting hack: I entered by hard hacking the account, victim was constantly using FB from their phone and not connecting from a PC. That was cool, since I just kept their session open and thought that it would give me a lot of extra time before being discovered. However some log-ins later I get a message saying: "strange device, we suspect someone else may be using your account, please confirm by answering these questions". Account was blocked, I left it to their rightful owner. All right, no big deal.

Second hack: I've been even able to make a "soft hack", just by getting the actual password without resetting it from the email, everything seems fine for the first couple of log-ins... next day, third log-in or so I get a message the saying something like "we suspect someone else may be using your account, please confirm by answering these questions". Answers which I even gave correctly (they were about linking names to pictures), yet in the end they added "we can't confirm your account, please wait some time" or something jibberish enough. Some hours later, victim gets a hold of their account, password change, slave lost. All right.

Thinking to myself: now things are getting strange. I thought about the fact I could still enter the accounts of two of my closest friends without problems even when using my proxy (and their real passwords)... okay, they DID log-in from my computer instead of the previous victim, yet it's strange, not mentioning the fact they didn't went through any confirmation process.

Third hack: Hard hack again, first log-in with new password, same "we cannot confirm this device" message. Just WTF.

So, do they have a hold of a big part of my masked IP? Could changing proxies help? Just what in the blue hell, I can't hack anyone anymore?

Sc?rf?c3_ - March 21, 2013, 5:23 am

In my experience that is a check on the ip country, if the login come from an unusually place.... they ask you to reconize some friends in photos or stuff like that. Try to use some proxy wich is from the same country of the victim, this should fix your problem.

happyhaxor - March 21, 2013, 2:03 pm

Just login from the same contry i.p as that of your slave. You can also us your slave as your proxy!

ewpublic - February 26, 2014, 3:55 am

Hey Low Ryder - any chance you can share with us the techniques you used to hack the accounts?

daniin_n - March 10, 2014, 3:51 am could someone get a fb password for me? pm :3

ne0 phr34k - March 14, 2014, 6:22 pm

TUT on how you're doing these hacks?

NotCoolBro - March 14, 2014, 6:24 pm

depending on how you are getting these accounts i would try routing through your victims connection. This is assuming your getting them via a RAT. If not then your best bet is to find out how they are most accessing it and spoof your user agent to that and then use a VPN/Proxy nearest to your victims location

MoRTiZz3 - March 15, 2014, 12:02 am

Would it be okay if you could provide a Tut on how to hack FB? Not many FB hackers that I have seen here have a Tut with FB

SIM-1241186 - March 15, 2014, 10:06 am

What's strange about this?

You're entering accounts that truly aren't yours, and as such, are getting flagged.

The proxy you use doesn't mean shit. In fact, it's probably likely to get the accounts locked even quicker.

It's not like they can't detect that you're using a proxy.

And if you're logging in from another continent, obviously that looks suspicious.

terrytenny - March 25, 2014, 12:22 pm

could someone get a fb password for me? pm plz