Princess Mononoke (Studio Ghibli)

SYNOPSIS:

A calm village residing in the mountains comes under attack from a demon-possessed boar one day.

Ashitaka, a young man and prince of the tribe, engages the creature in an attempt to save his village. During the battle, the boar bites him on the arm, leaving it blackened and cursed. Following his village's traditions, Ashitaka is exiled and becomes a wanderer, looking for a solution to the curse before it engulfs him.

Iron Town is a fortress under the leadership of Lady Eboshi. Through the clearing of the surrounding forests, Iron Town produces large amounts of Ironsand, used for gunpowder and other machinery. However, because of the forests destruction, nearby animal clans seek revenge led by a human girl of the Wolf clan called San.

When Ashitaka comes to Iron Town, he discovers the area consumed in battle. Horrified, he attempts to create peace and befriend the Wolf Clan. However, after the forest's eradication and the ongoing war between Human and Beast, will the Spirit of the Forest be forgiving and accept Ashitaka's request to expel his curse?

Just finished this film (bought it last night, been dying to see for years but never had a good copy since all the streams on the internet I ever found weren't decent enough). Truly a Miyazaki masterpiece. I already had high expectations but I was still blown away by the art, maturity, pacing, meaning and overall feel of the film.

My only semi-complaint:

Spoiler (Click to View) They built up the (oddly quick) relationship between Ashitaka and Mononoke, however the very end of the film simply just has them go their separate ways. Mature of them nevertheless seeing as they had to do their duties, but such a tease :/ I'm glad that it ended the way it did however, Miyazaki being wise and not falling for a cliché love story ;) .

Just purely a wonderful movie and was worth wanting to see all these years, watch it if you haven't ;)
