Well the text must be "Fox" you can pick the render but I prefer it to be something to do with a fox. A real life one if possible. Post all your work if you win I will ask for the .psd also. Open for 1 week post your attempts here.

Closes on 14 June 2013.

There was more to it than "taking" a stock photo and adding text to it. I extracted the fox for example.

Please take your unlearned criticism elsewhere (my PM for example), you contribute nothing to the thread.

Fine.

Magic Wand the fox out of a stock photo, desharpen the edges, add drop shadow, add text, with like 4 effects, add a flare to the text, then make circles and use transparency, to a grey background.

Fuck you.

I think the price of gfx work is directly proportional to how much a person likes the piece. Different people like different styles and things. I'm trying to see what he likes most by providing numerous alternatives. It's not like I'm submitting this as my final offer and the client had already paid 50$.

It's actually called focal point. You can't have over-effected stuff all around a canvas cause there will be no focal point, the eye won't focus at any point.

Also, the text combines white, gray, red and orange, the colours that were used on the render's effects and in my opinion it fits it perfectly.

I don't get it why people want over-edited sh1t with things flashing and flying all around the canvas.

janoycresnova23 - June 5, 2013, 7:59 pm

@Leo, everyone has a different taste in graphics. Some people pay less $ for shit ton of effects and stuff. Other people pay a lot of $ for simplicity. So it varies. Also, us graphic designers have to be flexible on people's comment. Sometimes they're just too harsh. I could've understood ProTech, but his criticism wasn't constructive at all and was a bit pointless(no offense).
