Hey i've gotta have that USA zipup how many do you have?

Darkwin - June 15, 2013, 6:40 pm

I don't understand how one could print an basic design on an white tee and call it an "clothing line", You do realize making an actual clothing line requires skill, sewing, knowledge on fabrics & inks. :/ Just saying its not an real clothing line, Just some printed shirts but best of luck with it.

Black Hat Activist - June 15, 2013, 6:49 pm

You should come up with more product before opening your online store.
To be honest I don't really see much here :/

Fiery - June 15, 2013, 7:17 pm

Chocolate - July 5, 2013, 8:48 pm

some of the clothes is really nice but you should try to invest a bit more on your thread design as well as logo to make it looks a bit more up to date and professional. anyways good luck selling bro

Fear. - July 5, 2013, 9:19 pm

If you have your own tags on it, I'll purchase off of you. I don't want some random tag on the T-Shirt or sweatshirt. If you don't you should put custom tags on it.

Killcam - July 5, 2013, 10:09 pm

I like these pullovers you have in stock.

I may make a purchase soon if I have extra funds available! ;)

I already have them sourced and being developed. so currently some items like the pullover jumpers contain no tags

Invest in some GFX for your site and make the site more lively bro. Also come up with a Logo that is yours like how Nike has the check.

As Etsy is a market place site (Like eBay) I can't do any GFX :(

I have purchased my own domain and as soon as I get more product I will eventually move to hosting my own site

No, I've added things onto garments so they're not straight thrifted and resold. The right word could be recycled but couldn't think of it at that time

Also I wish I made a profit of 22$. As stated I sell everything near or at cost and some of the denim jackets where made by me, I've used available trims found around the house for buttons and such
