Thread: What do I do in this situation

SixVI - June 21, 2013, 8:58 am

Up to this point i have avoided doing like a craigslist method. But last night i decided to give it a go. Posted one up right before i went to bed just go give it sometime to get a few replies. Woke up expecting to maybe get around 10 replies.

Anyone have any ideas on how to weed out potentials? Do i just read through them all and pick the ones that seem the most flirty or something? The post itself was subtly enough to get some people that are just trying to be nice but also attracted what i was aiming for.

you can usually tell from how they respond to the ad. craigslist typically (if you know what you're doing) can yield the highest volume of potentials, but a good number of them just want free pics etc. that being said, look for the people who say they want to meet and have sex or have dinner or whatever. those people can be milked for money very easily, other than that the more you do it, the more you get a feel for it.

gotta agree with this,another way could to mass email them a sample and ask for them to email you back if they are interested in buying something for you.

ignore the ones that

- say to go live with them
- say they have lots of $$$

Just go live with them once they paid , ignore the others.

Are you doing pics or shows?

When I did pics I would send them all the same message, shouldn't take too long.

Sometimes I would just say in the ad that I am looking for money in echange for pics and I would have my reasons in the ad. Only people willing to pay would respond, more customers than you would think. Very quick too, most wont waste your time and you don't have to talk dirty.

I was trying to find one of the "daddy" types to take care of me. The whole situation ended up being mostly a waste of time. I didnt put anything in the ad about selling anything because i figured it would get flagged.
