

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: What to do with access to server panel?

Hackinator - July 6, 2013, 4:12 pm

Hello good people,

some weeks ago I have acquired access to a parallels panel from a webdesign company. Now I dumped all the databases and cracked the passwords from the sites that were hosted on there (around 50), but I am running out of ideas now. What would be the best way to use this server? I was thinking if I install a jdb, they will realize that something is wrong and just change the password or whatever on the server.

So yeah... anyone could help me out a bit here? I need to do something "silent" or at least do it somehow that they don't directly think I have access to the whole server. I was thinking on putting a JDB just on one site maybe.... but i'm open for other, better ideas :P

ZombiedaysHF - July 6, 2013, 8:55 pm

(Jul 6, 2013 04:12 PM)Hackinator Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Hello good people,

some weeks ago I have acquired access to a parallels panel from a webdesign company. Now I dumped all the databases and cracked the passwords from the sites that were hosted on there (around 50), but I am running out of ideas now. What would be the best way to use this server? I was thinking if I install a jdb, they will realize that something is wrong and just change the password or whatever on the server.

So yeah... anyone could help me out a bit here? I need to do something "silent" or at least do it somehow that they don't directly think I have access to the whole server. I was thinking on putting a JDB just on one site maybe.... but i'm open for other, better ideas :P

set up ssh access so you could always have access to it... or shell it and root server and mass deface the server ?

Hackinator - July 7, 2013, 6:58 am hmm I don't really want to deface everything, because after all quite a few people make a living with the company so I don't want to fuck them up completely (besides there is not much gained with defacing a page).

But thanks for the other suggestions :)

whyitell - July 7, 2013, 7:01 am

Do what I do, remane the index and replace it. But put in the deface page that You didn't deleate anything and that all there files are safe.