Picklez - November 16, 2013, 4:42 am

I don't feel that the blacklist is very effective as you can easily find API link and just make your own request to it. I suppose you could host a script on your own server which would do the connection to api.crays.ws (if the provided username isn't in the blacklist), which would also keep your key safe. This method may also be better for you because you can change the API in which it uses without the need for users to download an updated version of the program.

This is a bad example of a resolving script, but, it does keep your key safe. I removed your key from the URL, so, no complaining, please.

PHP Code

<?php
    $skype = $_GET['skype'];
    echo file_get_contents("http://api.crays.ws/index.php?key=REDACTED&user={$skype}");

This is all just some constructive criticism, however, if you don't mind people using and knowing your key, then continue how you are.
