First assignment for recruitment has begun. For further information, please get in the IRC.

The assignment link can be found in the topic of #lobby in the IRC.

[img]http://img24.imageshack.us/img24/1800/5o9x.png[/img]

I am hereby announcing an official change. Dynasty will now be focused mainly on hacking and we will recruit only the most skilled members. The first wave, the core members of the group will be handpicked and invited by us. Pentesting, networking and programming enthusiasts are welcome as well. The leaders are as following:

Lani
-?Divine-
Drake Bell
nick
hardcode
Keeper

The group is divided into three branches. First branch is the leaders. We are the ones who will be making decisions and managing the group, as well as holding lessons. We are the top branch.

The second branch is made of our core members, our hearts and pride, members that will define us. As I previously stated, it consists only of most skilled members and they will be the ones that will assist us, the top branch, in teaching the third branch.

The third branch is the lowest, base level of the group. The third branch isn't included into the usergroup on HackForums. Everyone can join the third branch as it is independent of skill. Everyone can join it and take part in weekly lessons that will be hosted, either on TeamViewer, or on our IRC. The third branch is for everyone who wants to learn and improve. The course is made to make a beginner advance to an intermediate level of knowledge.

Members of the third branch will be given a chance to join the second branch. Everyone who joins the training is given a potential chance to be one of us. How, you might ask? By actively taking part in the free hacking course.

The training course consists of two things: Direct training from a higher branch This means that a skilled member will directly be hosting a lesson and inducting information. The method of teaching is direct and concise. All you have to do is listen. It will also be teaching you about real life scenarios and things you don't find in tutorials. It will gradually pick up in difficulty. Allow me to demonstrate with an example; It starts easy. Your average LFI tutorial does teach you the actual method, but what happens when you can't use the RCE functions? Or what if you don't have a writable directory? Or how would you go with actually locating the access logs without bruteforcing? It will go from easier aspects and after months we will be introducing you to low level exploitation and exploit development.

Indirect training This is done in form of assignments. You will be given a task and reasonable time to finish it. The assignments will start out low, but will get harder and harder. Do not expect unreasonable difficulty as it is in our interest to teach, not scare you. As you do the assignment and look up the information needed to complete it, you will be teaching yourself.

Upon finishing the training, the members that remain will be tested in order to make sure that they've improved and to make sure that they haven't cheated along the way. Members that pass the final test will make it into the second branch and into Dynasty.

Recruitment for third branch will begin soon.

As I have previously stated, the first wave of core members will be handpicked by us. If you believe that you have what it takes to join the second branch automatically PM -?Divine- and he will personally evaluate you. Waste time and you're blacklisted. Expect great difficulty. And so the Dynasty of rulers begins.

These changes are very nice to see, I hope it will work out well!

Mutes - October 13, 2013, 6:50 am

Interesting. I'm interested in this. I'll post an application for the third branch when you are recruiting.

Daddy???????????? - October 13, 2013, 6:56 am

I am very, very happy to see a group do something like this and I appreciate all Leaders of Dynasty for doing this for the HackForums Community as this is something I would enjoy and I think everyone else would to. I will be putting in a Application for the third branch when you post the Recruitment as I don't think I have ever been so excited to see someone offer this type of service. Well I hope this goes well, Good luck to all of you.

Steven' - October 13, 2013, 7:02 am

I've been spending some time with this group for a while you can learn a lot, Lani is cool (sometimes ?) and rest of the leaders are very nice.

Im gone brah - October 13, 2013, 7:13 am

Looks promising, Hopefully it wont turn out like the others :)

Hopefully this group is able to hold their word better than pretty much every single other teaching group that has ever existed on the forum. I hope your teachers actually are constantly willing and able to teach and you guys aren't going to just force the students to try to learn on their own.

Good luck with your changes.

The Alliance and MRT.

MRT is in a different class in my mind. Official non purchased groups are a different tier in my mind.

I also wasn't aware that the Alliance taught lessons, I don't know much about them.

I'll concede, but I my statement still holds for almost every user-owned groups with very few exceptions.

Well sorry to disappoint, but yes, our students need to prove to us that they have the ability to be self sufficient before they are accepted into the group. We have no time for people that are incapable of teaching themselves material that has been covered extensively already. I've never met a knowledgeable hacker who's been spoon-fed all of his 'career'. While of course, the members will be happy to answer specific questions when students are trying to complete an assignment, telling them what to do exactly will be both futile for us as well as them.

Oh I'm not saying that students aren't supposed to be able to teach themselves, that's a sign that someone can be a successful programmer.

However what happened to almost all groups that had a teacher-student program, they always seemed to end up with teachers not holding any classes and students expected to just ask questions when they had them (which wouldn't always get answered because the "teachers" didn't want to spend time explaining things). There's a huge difference between spoon feeding and actually having classes and making sure your teachers teach.

I hope that makes sense.

This group has never been a marketing group.

It used to be a groups just for friends to have fun. We figured that it would be much smarter if we had a "real" direction.

We believe that the group will be much better now. Two new and smart leaders, including a set of core members who are knowledgeable and respected men.

It makes sense. But as a leader of Antagonism who held an awful heck of lessons, I can easily differ. Most of those groups stop holding lessons because of one thing and it only. The supposed 'teachers' run out of things to teach.

Of course not. We are looking for the most knowledgeable hackers here on HF. We are also obviously doing this teaching program for a reason, as we know the number of initial members will be low. As far as your comment about "knowing people that make root look like cybergate users", I find it hard to believe you know anyone THAT much better than those who were able to backdoor nmap. Although there's premature bad blood between Legion and Dynasty, I wish all of you the best of luck. I'll be applying where possible, and hope to - at some point - work with group members. No one on HF is a "hacker". It's a dying art, focused more on fame whoring and destruction than computer logistics: it's changed definitions over time.

Maybe, if the members of this group - and that of Legion - worked alongside each other, we could enlighten HF members to the roots of the art, and how to perform further exploitation than "herp deerp add ' to ur url"

See y'all around ?

So when do you intend on having recruiting for programmers?

Suboptimal - October 15, 2013, 9:06 am

Handpicking members?

A member of your "group" tried to sell his second HF ub3r account a few days back. Made me chuckle a bit.

vitafortis - October 15, 2013, 9:15 am

Holy shit, I'm shocked. Who the hell is leading your "programmers"? None of those leaders are Programmers, and if they are, they're not active at all in that section. How will you know who is a good programmer and who isn't? I have a feeling programmers in your group will be heavily under-represented, or only represented by fakes.

Fair enough. The reason I ask is that a lot of low level "hacking" and exploiting requires programming, unless you're a skid. Just saying.

You either know what you're doing or you don't, simple as that.

You should be the one to talk. If hacking entails exploiting vulnerabilities in a way they weren't supposed to be, wouldn't that make the person doing it a "hacker"? I don't know what I have to show you in order to prove my groups' legitimacy... not like it matters though.

What do you think our exploits are coded in? Not only do you have to know programming languages to code various tools and scripts, but it's also essential to know the language you're attempting to exploit if you're looking to be sufficient.

That's my point, yet, none of you seem to be active in the programming section, so none of you appear to know programming. The reason I challenge you on this is too many people get by with metasploit, Kali/Backtrack, and etc. They don't know real programming. When was the last time you breached a firewall and stolen information from a Linux machine? Vulnerabilities on Windows Machines are a dime in a dozen. I want to see the "hackers" of your group "hack" Linux machines.

At first I thought you were actually going to say something smart but now I am laughing like a retard. What you are claiming to be 'advanced' and what you want to 'see' is basic knowledge. I overestimated you greatly. You think the team I've assembled can't compromise fucking "linux machines"? LOL.

I also cannot stop laughing at the fact that you are assuming that only people posting in programming sections know how to program. I personally don't go there as it isn't worth my time, I am active in WFH and in it only.

By compromise Linux machines you mis-understand me. I'm not talking about tools, or anything, I'm talking Terminal and stealing information that way. I know it can be done, and I know it can be done easily so long as you know what you're doing. I just don't want your group to be full of skids and tools. Also, I relate the adequacy of programmers to their willingness to share knowledge, not to be stuck up pricks.

Good luck with your group. All I see are ignorant users attempting to gain favor by "inviting" members into their group. Fix the error in the OP at least. You "hand pick and invite everyone" yet anyone and their mother can PM you about an evaluation.

Seriously though, i think i got dumber after reading that. Not only it is "easy" (kinda) to program your own UNIX-based (userland or kernelland) rootkits that hook into specifics, as well as standing in your way as an anti-forensics sneaky bastard.

Hacking can be simply writing code. Programmers (the technical term would be "hacker")

Hacking can also be manipulating your TV to be a radio station or something like that.

However, I have a question about the 3rd branch. How much time do I have to commit? I am quite unpredictably busy with school, so I'm not exactly sure how much I'll be able to give this. If I start and at some point stop will I be able to later continue on the same path? Or will I have to start from the very beginning? Do you start from a completely beginners level?

EDIT: What will it take to join the 3rd branch? Will I need to apply/take some sort of test?

As far as I know the third branch is set for anyone to join. It is basically up to you to be proactive and seek out the lessons and tutorials that will be provided to those who join this branch.

After a decent amount of these lectures and or tutorials have been given out you can opt to "test in" to see who actually spent the time to learn what was given and who didn't.

More or less.

What does it matter what the userbar looks like. They could have a giant dick in the userbar.

As long as the group members themselves are what they say they are, a userbar doesn't mean anything.
