Thread: WARNING TO GROUP BUYERS

Omniscient - November 25, 2013, 3:26 pm

I do not allow multiple group owners. It's ONE owner per group. This means any agreements or partnerships you create are not going to be protected or sanctioned by me. If you think you have a percentage or partnership in a group that's not something I personally will recognize. If you get screwed over I will not help you. I will only respect and listen to the SINGLE OWNER when the group was formed or sold. I do not allow partnership in groups and any agreements you made are completely at your own risk.

I highly advise you do not agree to have any partial group ownership. You can and will eventually be fucked over. This is a fair warning to the idiots that refuse to listen to me and one day will get burned a few thousand bucks. Don't cry to me when it all falls apart.

brandon12640 - November 25, 2013, 3:27 pm

Cracking down on all these group leaders now... I am liking it

Omniscient - November 25, 2013, 3:28 pm

It's just a fair warning...no crackdown. I'm seeing groups being sold in partnerships then coming to me as if I give a fuck. I don't. I recognize only one owner per group.

Linxy - November 25, 2013, 3:28 pm

I have a feeling I know who this is applying too...

gigabit - November 25, 2013, 3:29 pm

Excellent.

I am actually thinking about purchasing a group.

Coton Pker - November 25, 2013, 3:29 pm

seems pretty legit.

I mean, it's not your problem if people are douchebags to eachother, you're running a business.

Vegas - November 25, 2013, 3:30 pm

It really is more risk than it's worth, I'd think.

One little argument and things can spiral out of control. Might as well keep it singular.

Bing™ - November 25, 2013, 3:30 pm

This happened more than once... cough Sandshrew cough

Raz?r - November 25, 2013, 3:33 pm

Groups with multiple owners will get a lot issues anyway. One good group leader that makes the decisions is way better then 2 partners that on discuss about making decisions.

I can see the problem with this, this must have been an recent issue? Sad honestly, I can't even elaborate on it. Idiots will be idiots, let children play. There's eventually gonna be a point where you can only warn them too much, or say too much in general.

Considering how I just lectured how only ONE person can own a group...there is no such thing to me as 2 members purchasing a group. Someone is the owner. That one owner makes all the decisions. If he tells me to remove X as leader or that I should transfer the group then no amount of protesting from a "partner" will matter to me. So if you get yourself into a partner situation for a group you're taking a huge risk and I will not be a protector or responsible for it.

Hmm, make's me question what's going to happen next since they already had this planned out. Hopefully they don't attempt to go through with the decision. But in the end they probably will... Only time will tell.

-?Divine- - November 25, 2013, 5:26 pm

It's a fair warning. But such things most likely will not happen. People here care too much about their influence, position and reputation among the community to do such a thing. A scam like that would be frowned upon, and the group cursed by the insulted community. Whilst the previous statement might be incorrect, that is at least how most of the leaders would think, and that possibility alone stops them from doing this.

Who would attempt to scam and break a partnership if that would mean getting himself labeled as a scammer forever? I doubt such scandal would pass by unnoticed, no one would want to own a group that everyone laughs at. But even so, I wouldn't put my money into someone else's hands no matter how well I know them.

I think this works better ^^

Omniscient - November 26, 2013, 12:19 am

Quote:Can I ask you why you won't allow multiple group owners, though?

A very simple and I would think obvious reason. If 2 members own a group then who is in charge? What happens when one group partner splits with the second group owner? And that will happen. Even these backend group partnerships often fall apart. If I was to officially recognize more than one owner I would be placed into a position I don't want to be in.

I'm just waiting for the day when 5 people buy 1/2 a group for $2000 each then cry to the community they got scammed.

This is a good warning.

A lot of people seem to think multiple people can "own" the group.

rapidfire08 - July 11, 2014, 6:19 pm

Heads up for the group owners. Stay safe Stay Happy

This was before the rule was placed

What about Anon? He owns legion and illuminati.

Voidling - July 12, 2014, 7:24 pm

Guys... this thread isn't about one guy owning multiple groups. It's about one group having multiple "owners."

Vinnie - July 12, 2014, 9:05 pm

The reason why he owns two groups now is because back in the days me and Anonymous bought two groups, the second group being Illuminati was sold to us without us knowing about not being allowed to own two groups, I left Illuminati & Legion leadership and Anonymous inherited both ownership's, it was a loop hole that we found by accident. Very few knew that until now, the group Illuminati was sold to us, then we were told by Omniscient we couldn't own a second group and the owner of Illuminati refused to refund and well shit went down.

I thought this was common knowledge, but thanks for the update omni.

It's actually nice of you Omni to post this warning, I actually haven't seen any group partnerships being broken up here so far, but It may have happened before I joined and maybe in private.

Most of the big drama was before I made this thread and most of it was semi-private between the fighting parties. This thread imho has helped curb the issue to something relatively small. Members are less likely to make a big drama of a bad partnership if they know they're going to get a finger pointed at them with a big "Told Ya So".

I can definitely agree that this thread has helped ease group sales. This thread was necessary in January of 2013 when the sale of Logic was going on from Logic --> The Angels. That was a rough fuck-up and a lot of confusion all because of one person.

Thanks for the clear up Vinnie.

Shame some bs happened but everything worked out I guess.

Well yeah, he's a cute and cuddly sort of guy as long as you aren't an asshole.

420 Blaze It - July 16, 2014, 2:07 pm

Omni's not a bad guy, he's understanding and is reasonable if you did nothing wrong.

Having one group leader really is the most sensible way. Conflicting leaders that feel they should have their way would be such a fucking pain to deal with. Just too bad they're a commodity now so the changes are going to become less frequent. I wonder how much Omni would make if he did a fat group upheaval and started selling them for 5k again for like a week? Mmm, change smells sweet. Cute and cuddly, even.
