I like it. How would we download it and put in on hackforums.

Shoppa - December 4, 2013, 7:46 pm

Looks really good, would love to test it but i'm a noob with those scripts.

Is it possible to add the script on this website op?

You need Greasemonkey to handle the userscript, and then you need the userscript.

1n9i9c7om - December 4, 2013, 9:38 pm

This theme looks quite sexy, was thinking about adding a theme like this to my userscript ?

I won't copy your theme, but I could I get the script please? I'd like to test it. :)

Theme looks pretty badass. If I liked the new theme I would use it.

I'm not sure if it's technically possible to load the userscript before the pageload, at least with GM_AddStyle. I'll try to research a bit about it, however. I do definitely notice it, but this is with every theme. :p

Edit: Just as I thought. There IS a way to do it, but since the DOM loads so damn fast, it will give you graphical errors on your screen. I mean, it works great, but half of the shit is still the original color since you're telling it to load before it starts. But if the HEAD loads faster, it doesn't give it enough time to apply the changes.

I asked whether they're allowed or not in my thread. He'd have said "No" if he doesn't want them. Also, our userscripts are just offering new variations of the new theme, so people are basically using it, just with other colors.

If he personally doesn't allow them,he'd add a policy against it, like he did with stresser signatures (as an example).

However, he's welcome to take my thread down as well if he wants.

You can do `// @run-at document-start`

That will make it run before page loads.

The loading is still an issue. For example on the Staff page it takes awhile to load the online statuses. A bit annoying to be honest.

But overall this is nice.

The behavior described by him is exactly what happens when you add that. It'll most likely just apply changes in the header.

That's what I did. As I said earlier, the DOM loads faster than the damn script itself, giving you broken bits of the script showing. For example, some things will be the default color, while others have turned half black, due to the rest of the script loading a fraction of a second after the head loaded. I did try, I can assure you. 8|

I see what you're saying. Are you referring to the Online Status popping up about 3 seconds after? If so, that's not related to my script at all. Thanks for pointing out the staff page, forgot about that.

I hear you, dude. I'm the same fucking way. A few pages back someone suggested it to me, and I implemented it me (I never pushed the update). I was testing it out, and the actual script would push the added styling via the Userscript, but there was nothing for the script to change, since it would load before the page loaded. Does that make sense? Let me make it simpler.

The script could not correctly add the style because the script loaded FASTER than the page it needed to add the styles to. So, essentially, it would throw an error and make the formatting of the page dumb because it loaded too fast. 8|

I'm going to be messing with it soon, because frankly, I hate that shit too. :o

(Jan 3, 2014 08:57 AM)Invisible Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Tried it out last night, just to dark for me. Good work though ?

Forgot to reply to you. I hear you dude. I'm going to be making tons of variations of it and allow you to select between them all via a drop down box located at the footer of the page. Until then, everyone will need to suffer. :p

You can get Adblock+ Element Blocking Helper to block anything you want on the page, including the "Welcome to HackForums" and date text.

Just select the icon, press Block Element, and hover your mouse on top of the element you want to remove and click. :p

Yeah, that's going to happen with this, unfortunately. :\ The page loads too fast for any changes to be made, and therefore, messes up the entire thing. D:

I made a script to get the old userbars yet as soon as they changed the userbars.

Omniscient removed it and PM'd me warning me to not post userscripts that change his sites design.

When I load a new page I always see the purple theme before it changes to the black theme. I heard from someone that you can make a script run at the top of the page rather than the bottom, so in that case, the black theme would load first. It'd be great if you could figure something like that out, but loving this theme btw.

You just press on the text "Download ... etc" (According to your browser) and it will download and prompted for install possibly. Then you choose the style you want (just press on the style number and it will install automatically, maybe permission will require). Restart your browser and it should be in effect, sometimes a reload is fine but I suggest restarting the browser. Have a nice day ?
