It'll be very interesting to see who get this award. I plan on putting some hacking tutorials for Android in my thread but it would be nice to see some information from Omniscient about this award.

There is a few individuals who do deserve this award for the assistance in the mobile section. A few of them have posted in this thread too.

It does look a little bit weird but no one has kissed ass in this thread. An award is an award to some individuals. Some people enjoy them. No one is criticizing the MLP award. That is an older MLP design and isn't up to date with the newer animated show on Hub.

Maybe not in this thread but its been done before and that's what i was referring to, As for the award itself sure an award may just be an award as you may put it but it just seems so out of place compared to the rest imo it just doesn't blend in.

People who know the differences between rooting and jailbreaking may have this pet peeve but it's just a common term people use to describe modifying the phone's OS. An example would be referring GNU/Linux as Linux. Technically speaking Linux is just a kernel. That is why a lot of people call it GNU/Linux and if they are specifically talking about the Linux kernel, they'll say "Linux kernel".

A bit confusing at the least.

I believe, because he's referring to one section. The Android section has half the posts/threads than the iOS section, which would be even HARDER to try to gain traffic towards it.

Gaining root access is rooting, no matter the device.

Jailbreaking is just a term for removing all restrictions, sandbox, code signing, and whatever user-land restrictions.

Phreaking is more so the network.

Someone correct me if I am wrong.

Phreaking was considered any modificaton of a device before the Internet was around.

E.G: 'Black Boxes'. People used these home-made devices to tap into Phone booths to get internet. Making your own ROM for an Android phone, or unauthorised apps for iDevices can also be counted in a sense.

Changing the IMIE or doing SIM modifications also counts.

Also; yes I was just being picky between the names for Jailbreak/Root, however I think that Phreaking would cover it more.

The award (to me) seems like it's promoting people to break software, where what I think Omni wants is to expand HF to the Mobile devices as well, and modify them in new and creative ways, as that is what a hacker is.

Someone who changes something for themselves.

That, to me, is Phreaking, not jailbreaking.

Jailbreaking is bypassing the DRM to allow software to be executed. Therefore allowing tweaks to the system itself. To be a bit more technical to the people who are savvy, it could be refer to the process of modifying the kernel. (in this case the modified FreeBSD kernel...) Rooting is similar but rooting isn't jailbreaking technically speaking. Both terms are very similar but you can actually legally obtain root via the manufacturer. Therefore you're not really breaking anything. Rooting and jailbreak also separate Android and iOS.

Sure both phones share vulnerabilities but it is possible to gain root access in a legal manner unlike with iOS where Apple restricts the user regardless.

Phreaking is more of the telecommunication part. John Draper started the whole "phreaking" phase. He's been considered one of the original "hackers" too.

They didn't have access to the Internet, so they made something on their own from something that exists already, and modified it to suit their need..

I guess it's what Omni wants us to do with the threads. Does he want it to be software cracking/open-sourcing, or does he want it to be general modification of all aspects.

Phreaking Cells Mobiles and PDA's

Phreaking has been around for decades. Learn to hack cellular phones, unlock cells, call tracing, and do reverse phone lookups. All mobile hacking discussion belongs here.

I would think mobile security and the whole general aspect of the devices. - It's mainly a mobile section award.

+Pirate - December 18, 2013, 9:30 pm

That's the bit I'm trying to clarify Thunder.

At the moment it seems like it's only OS-based modifications from the name of the award and the description, but there could be more opportunity and modifications if it was for more than just the OS.

@Bitmoney, I have about average experience with Phreaking or Jailbreaking, so I'm not whoring, I'm trying to figure out the thing which Omni wants us to do to obtain the award, for others.

Dood - December 18, 2013, 9:32 pm

I think Adam should be studying and not going for the new award...

Anyways, I don't think Omni is going to hand out this award for at least a week or so. This way, activity increases, and more people will be competing to be the first to acquire the award.

JailBreak Freak Award Wrote:For the smart phone hackers.

Hacking is the act of manipulating something that wasn't intended to be manipulated. But it could also be programming, or even penetration testing. So the term "hacking" has a very large field of coverage.

I see no reason to assume it would only for OS-based modifications.

Those are who I'd see most likely getting this award soon, or at least those who would deserve it.

Mohatu - December 19, 2013, 4:40 am

I love the idea behind this award, and I hope people will use it as a learning experience. Of course an award is nice, but it's the knowledge you gain from striving for it that really counts in the long run. I remember jailbreaking my very first iPod Touch 1 when I was still in high school, it must be 5 years ago at this point. When word got around, I was soon the go-to person, charging $5 to jailbreak everyone's device. That got me enough money to continuously upgrade my devices, until I ended up with a 4th Gen touch that I still use as a music device. Two and a half years ago, I got my first Android phone, a Galaxy S II. Of course it was rooted within an hour of getting home. Since then I've been active in the XDA-Dev community and have also upgraded to a Nexus 4 device since it is known for its "hackability". From experience, this is a wonderful award to add to the forum, and gaining the knowledge needed to get a chance of getting it is well worth it in the long run. Good luck everyone, especially Grin and xadamxk (noob).

I want Polymath 1.0 to get a Computing award or OS award or whatever. This guy DESERVES an award. He doesn't post as often as many of us, but he's one of the smartest guy I ever met on HackForums.

Gonna be a good battle between Grin vs. xadamxk.

After all the time I've spent in the iOS section, my vote would have to go to xadamxk.

I like Grin, he's not a bad person, but it's easy for members to get on his bad side. Not really a bad side...just a lot of ignorant users being ignorant and Grin doesn't like it.

EDIT: Oops, kind of late xD Congrats Adam!

Of course, because it will divide them in two distinct category. But I'm talking more about computer OS awards. Windows Award, OS X Award, GNU/Linux (FreeBSD, Unix, if you want too) Award. Those would not be related to hacking, but to signify that his person almost "master" the OS of the award. That they help day and night in the section, they're dedicated to it and they're excellent at troubleshooting, etc. But I don't think it would ever be instaured. Otherwise, more people might complain about getting a "Computer Hardware" award, a "Beginner Hacking" section award etc. You know, asking awards for every sections.

But I can still dream.

I don't want to create fake awards. It means nothing if people can't see them I guess. Like for exemple, there's a member in the Windows section, he's not as active as me or other members. But when he posts, I can tell you that this guy knows his stuff. He only needs ONE POST to solve any problem. His posts are lengthy, HQ, clear, well explaining, it covers everything. And I think these kind of members should be recognized. And I know it doesn't have to be globally recognized through HackForums. But just you know, tag them the award that would say "This guy knows Windows, he knows how it works, what have to be done when there's a problem, troubleshooting to him is nothing.", etc. I might explain myself a bit in a clumsy way as English isn't my native language, but I guess you can get my point.

That guy is probably one of the most HQ and humble I've seen on HackForums. He NEVER created a SINGLE THREAD. All he does, he login in from time to time, checking the threads in the Windows section (and maybe Linux, OS X, Android, etc.), answer all the threads that are not answered or answered wrongly with a COMPLETE and DETAILED answer, and move on to the next thread. To me, he's the "Protector", "Helper" of the Windows section. I wish this guy could at least get something more than my simple Rep on him.

I agree it has actually, but my thread was there way before hand ;)

Grin - January 4, 2014, 12:39 pm

The reason I chose this icon is because although it's symbol is widely recognized in the iOS jailbreaking community, it doesn't necessarily exclude Android. The image is the process of downloading jailbreak data. It's not exclusive, but it's almost universal for jailbreakers alike to recognize this icon.

I know Omniscient has worked on this one...

[img]<http://x.hackforums.net/uploads/awards/jailbreak.jpg>[/img]

(Which isn't bad at all) To me, though, it would appear that the one that this one represents the process of jailbreaking and relates closer to the jailbreak community.

It took awhile to make the picture award suitable so please take a look here...

W/ HF Background

W/ Transparency

Not award sized, but I figured that could be alterable.

I'm going to say something that some of you might not like now. If you don't have an idea of how the jailbreak community operates and how legendary each tool is to our image, I ask of you to not comment on this thread. Thanks.

*I think Omniscient said something about the current icon being one that will work for the time being, so I figured this one might work permanently.
