-the vouchs and video proof look ugly at the top

-makes the title on the gfx font bigger and with color

-make the text fonts bigger

-make the subtitles on the gfx bigger and with color

-make "The Facts" thing bigger and with a different colo

-make the packages thing bigger and with more color and do not make it so it is touching the bottom make the gfx sides bigger so it will be like it is inside it but not touching anything

-on frequently asked questions put "does it require an investment"? and "is it white black or grey hat?"

Anyways thanks for hosting even if I do not win you rock!

What are your opinions on my current thread design?: Although I can see where you're coming from by shoving the big-bucks in our face the moment we enter the thread. That's not very professional.. it makes you look desperate. The YT video being the first thing you see is rather out of place and should be something that is placed under the thread graphics. Other than that I can see a little inconsistency with the spacing in your thread design. You should try to keep the same spacing when you resize down objects to make it look nice. Your thread is definitely not on a design grid though. Things look much more aligned on a grid so you should probably get one. With the amount of information being packed I would say that you should be using a 16 column web-design grid. Other than that GLWS

What are your opinions on my current thread design?

Your current thread design is greatly designed, and has a professional look. I also like how you branded your product with a logo. I give it a 9.5/10. But in terms of marketing, and converting visitors into sales, you have not put enough effort into it. You may announce the bonuses and tell how much they are worth, this does a great push for the visitor to buy. Also, you should start some promotional offers, such as discounts. You can also hire a great copywriter to write you a highly converting sales letter. Other than that, put some more effort into converting visitors to sales.
