Thread: Probux - What the hack is wrong with my referrals?

COOLCAR - January 24, 2014, 8:06 am

It clicked stable 300-400 a day.

Now look at the last days:

Paying for referrals is a huge ripoff.

This is why you don't rely on others to make money for you. A big reason I quit that probux bullshit the 2nd day I started it.

tthudium - January 24, 2014, 5:08 pm

People will be active for a few days then quit the site because they don't earn money. Probably just like you will :P (Your'e someone's referral too)

mafai44 - January 24, 2014, 7:32 pm are you renewing your referrals? make sure you are renewing and recycling.

zulu guy - January 25, 2014, 5:56 am

Also make sure you're clicking the required ads in a day. I once missed a day and got only a very small amount of clicks compared to what I would've made if I clicked my ads.

decenthasoo - January 25, 2014, 8:17 am

my referrals are active every day no problem

Yes exactly, I quit probux after a week or two. I soon realised that it was just a waste of time.

Sautéed - January 25, 2014, 4:07 pm

Probably people just quit. That's all lol.

COOLCAR - January 26, 2014, 10:10 am

I had 300 clicks, and a few days later only 7 clicks.

Not all my referrals are quitting I guess?

Buddha - January 26, 2014, 10:19 am do people do well with probux it just seems like a phase everyone goes through

There's been many people complaining about things like this, however I have yet to really undergo any large dip like you.

The thing about these referrals is that you will have to recycle them quite frequently. Being real people, they can lose interest in the website.

GfxGamester - January 26, 2014, 1:01 pm

I kinda think that ProBux manually control these clicks, but that's just me I could be crazy.

Chief Mark - January 26, 2014, 1:02 pm

Refresh them. I thought that was an option on ProBux. Correct me if I'm wrong.
