Thread: Ask a Furry: Clearing Up Misconceptions

Crypto™ - January 31, 2014, 4:19 pm

Inspired a bit by iMyth's thread on clearing up myths about homosexuality, I'm going to go ahead and do something a little more "taboo". Furrries.

Yes, that weird thing where people find their animal spirits or something like that. There are different brands of furrries. I'll start off with a few FAQs.

Why do you dress up like animals and fuck other people dressed up like animals?

Uh, no. Most furrries frown upon people who do that, and I'm among the majority of those. There's a name for those people, and they're known as murrsuiters. I have no interest in that, and the majority of furs don't either. If you think otherwise, stop watching CSI.

Do you fuck/want to fuck animals?

What!?! Ew. No. There are people who do. We don't talk about those people. There's a difference between furrries, and those... things.

Do you like My Little Pony?

Nope. Nope nope nope. There are those who do, and they're called bronies, but bronies != furrries.

What percentage of furrries are LGBT?

Funny you should ask that. I ended up doing an in depth analysis of 3000 personal ads on a furry dating site, Pounced, and here's the results.

Click this to view the image

Code Gay: 866

Bi: 1281

Straight: 616

Unknown: 237

Total: 3000

As you can see, almost 3/4ths of the furry community is gay/bi, along with over 200 who did not specify a sexual orientation in their profile.

What makes someone a furry?

There are any number of things, and it really depends a lot on what one's own perception of a furry is. For me, I'm interested in anthropomorphic animals, and the art culture surrounding them, as well as being interested in fursuits and performing, so that's what makes me a furry. However, to others, it could be any one thing of those, or it could be something completely different, like a fascination with animals that extends beyond normal human fascination to the point where they wish to be in a community populated by animals, or humanoid animals.

Do you jack off to furry porn/hentai?

I do not actively seek it out, but I'm unlikely to turn away from something if it turns me on.

Are all furies into [Insert Fetish Name Here]?

Short answer: No.

Long answer: An individual's preference in sexual stimulus does not pertain to an individual culture or community. They function independently. One can be a furry, and not have any sexual fetishes at all, or be into every sexual fetish under the sun. One's identification with a community does not signify interest in a fetish.

Anyway, ask away if you so desire. Please, keep it constructive. I'll answer all serious questions to the best of my ability and knowledge.

What about animal costumes turns you on? Furthermore when you engage in such acts is it with a significant other, or do you enjoy such acts because of the anonymity?

For me, it's not really a sexual thing. I'm more in it for the community. Animal costumes don't turn me on, but I find them a fun facet of furies. It's like Halloween for some people. They put significant amounts of work into their costumes, and it's generally interesting to see how people express their "fursona".

As for acts, I enjoy the art, I enjoy the camaraderie, and I enjoy having a like-minded community. As for those who are turned on by fursuits, and the like, I doubt it's about the anonymity. It's more likely the same way that bondage turns some people on. Furthermore, many furies actually don't have sex in fursuits, nor do they growl, bite, meow, or otherwise act like an animal in sex outside of possibly roleplay. ?

It's basically creating a roleplay character. You name it, you give it a personality, it can be a direct reflection of your personality, or it can be someone completely different.

As for the fursuits, not every furry has them. In fact, I'd say that many don't, including myself. There are artists who will custom make them, or you can buy some premade ones, though by doing that, you're basically adopting a character. They can be quite expensive, which is part of the reason I don't have one, in addition to me not really having any opportunity or reason to wear it :P. Some can run upwards of a thousand dollars.

The furry community is generally any animal character in general, though inside of that, there are further subdivisions. Namely, furies (the main ones) and scalies (dragons, lizards, snakes, etc.). A dragon is still considered a furry, though to be specific, you can call them scalies.

I just kind of fell into the community. I started just as a "human observer", then eventually I developed my own fursona and "became" a furry, even though I was already involved in the community before.

As for the number of furies around, I'm sure there are some that don't admit it, but I've met more than I thought I would in any non-furry specific place.

Rarely. Some furries are so into the community, that it permeates every aspect of their life, and you'll notice it, but usually, you would never guess someone's a furry unless they tell you.

Erm, no. I do not have any interested in fucking someone dressed in a fursuit. I prefer human/human sex. I find fursuit sex to be awkward, even as a concept. No, I haven't tried it either. No, I don't pretend that someone's an animal while I fuck them. For me, it's a community that, yes, does have some sexual aspects. Outside of that, it's just something social for me.

Well, allow me to clarify. Not all furries are bronies, and not all bronies are furries. I've met more than a few people who are both, but I've met a few people who assume that for some reason, all furries are bronies.

Anyway, yes, bronies do turn up in furry fandoms, but it's kind of like scalies, it's a subset. Man, I over thought that xD

It really does vary from person to person. Yes, there are people out there who are into the sexual aspect of it, and then there are people in it for the art. The furry art community is amazing. In fact, from my experience, the majority of furries are artistic in some way, though I'm not really xP I'm more of an art fanboy.

That would be a person who is both a brony and a furry. If you really desire a portmanteau for that, try brurry, or a fony. Hehe. But yeah, it's really two different subgenres, though a brony can encompass both sometimes. It's kind of an ambiguous term. Like "edible". I suppose it could go both ways. Not all bronies are furies, and not all furies are bronies, but some are both :)

I would like to go to a convention, and I do not own a fursuit yet. :)

I do have a fursona. A black and blue tiger, that's basically a mirror of my personality.

I haven't really answered that in full yet :) I'm interested in the community in terms of art, there seems to be more LGBT people per capita in the furry community than any other group, so I fit in well with that crowd, being pansexual myself. They're also extremely accepting of basically everything, and artsy, and friendly. I feel like I'm talking in circles. Anyway, I just found out I fit in well with the community, and I've made some pretty amazing friends within it. Also, they're tolerant of my incessant need to use emoticons. :3

Your inclusion of that statement is understandable, given that statement's own notoriety, and forgiven, as it is far from the first, and unlikely to be my last, time of hearing that statement. You'd think there'd be some originality by now XP.

I do not have a costume (yet), and I am a black and blue tiger that's basically me, if I were actually a tiger. How that came to be, I started out as a husky, but that just didn't jive with me for some reason. Maybe I felt it was too common, maybe I just wanted to be something besides a husky. After that, I tried creating something custom-ish, but then I remembered, I can't draw for shit, particularly without a reference. At this point, I got a detailed introduction to the furry community, beyond my previously scarce knowledge, and found a character I liked and purchased it with tips I received from DJing. (It wasn't that DJing was lucrative, it was just that it was a holiday, and there was a sale, and I couldn't afford much else XP) So after a little bit of customization, I sort of adopted my character as my fursona. :)

It can be anything related to anthropomorphic animals, real or otherwise. And its just something that you create so that it fits you. Nor do you have to have only one.

phrenolingerie1980 - February 8, 2014, 8:15 am

Do you feel that the desire to create a "fursona" stems from possible personality disorders?

For example... someone who suffers from extreme shyness might feel more comfortable shielded behind a full body fox costume?

That person, disguised as the fox, might then feel free to be the outgoing and spunky person they always wanted to be because... well... that is the personality of the fox.

That's an interesting thought, though I don't believe that holds true for myself.

I'm typically pretty outgoing, and I don't have a suit either. I've never been diagnosed with any personality disorders, nor have I felt uncomfortable in social situations.

I actually just went to my first furry meet, and felt quite comfortable even without a suit, though I may act differently if I did have a suit. A "character" so to speak. Fursuiters are often called performers as well, so it would make sense.

Well put question.

Also, to answer the unasked question of "What's a furmeet like?", it's basically like a party. Lots of mingling, lots of meeting, and a fair amount of party stuff, like dancing, chatting, and Cards Against Humanity.

phrenolingerie1980 - February 9, 2014, 7:15 pm

I hope you didn't take offense to the term "personality disorder" and thanks for your answer. It was something I've always wanted to ask a furry but never felt comfortable asking.

Not at all. It's a reasonable question, and this is an open discussion, so I'm glad you got to ask it. Some furries may have that mentality, since I speak only for my own little slice of the furry fandom :3

There are a few people that aren't universally liked, and then there are those who are universally loved. Bandit is one of the guys at the local furmeet, some people love him, some people hate him. I don't know him well enough to make a judgement of my own.

I'd say that I respect their opinions, and they are perfectly entitled to them, although I'd like to remind them that we're human beings as well, and they may well know a furry and be good friends with them, since not everybody is out about their furriness. It really doesn't change someone as a person, rather it's just an interest. Magicmann basically covered it all :)

Huh, apparently this is the most common perception of the furry fandom. I blame CSI for that. It's not about that for me. In fact, I'm scarcely into the sexual aspect of it at all. The art community is amazing, I get to meet like minded people, and even those that do dress up in fursuits don't usually have sex with them. There's a whole different subculture devoted to that known as murrsgiving, but I won't go into that.

It's just a social community for me. Like going to Comic Con, or any convention really. Though sometimes in smaller contexts, like monthly meets.

I assure you, for me, it was not. Hell, I thought I was straight for a long ass time, but then I realized, it didn't matter the gender, if I liked someone, I could be attracted to them romantically.

Also, a relationship is not purely sexual, as you seem to insinuate. Hell, you can even be asexual and have a relationship.

Same reason some people have hobbies, or hang out with a particular group of people. They enjoy it, they find solace in it, they mesh well with the people, or they're just interested :) To oversimplify it, some people like chess enough to join a chess club, for the social aspect. It's not entirely correct, but each person has their own reasons for their furriness.

(Feb 13, 2014 07:33 PM)Samantha Shaw Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Yes, I choose to like women. I don't like dick in my butthole.

Like I said, it's not purely sexual. I identify as pansexual, so I'm attracted to people for who they are as a person, not necessarily on a sexual attraction basis.

You just become one. You can be a human in the furry fandom, or you can create a fursona, which is basically the furry you. It can be exactly like the real life you, or it can be someone completely different. There's nothing official, it's just people forming a community. As for convincing non-furies to like you, if they're too biased to just accept that it's something you enjoy, I don't know what to tell you. It doesn't have to be something you like publicly either. I'm pretty closeted about it. Just the friends who are furies, plus two know about my furriness.

How come furies are always seemingly drawn/represented in a Japanese, manga artstyle? Is it simply because most of the furry community is into manga/anime or is there an actual reason?

Not sure if trolling or what, but there can be lots of fetishes, and, yes, I'm sure that there can be people that like what you just said, not every aspect of the furry community is sexualized, like Crypto™ already said, most people think that it's only sex, but there can be lots of good aspects to it beside that, afaik.

What the hell? No, almost no furrys are to my knowledge. I didn't even know what dendrophilia was until I Google'd it. BDSM, it just depends on people's fetishes. Cumming inside each other, also, just depends on what people are into.

Being a furry isn't about sexuality. That is a part of it like almost everything nowadays, but people make it out to seem like all being a furry is, is fucking the first person you see. That isn't true.

(Although, I personally think having someone cum in me would be hot as hell. ?)

It's the same as other people. It's personal preference. Fetishes aren't distributed throughout a community. If someone's into it, then someone's into it, but very rarely, if ever, does a fetish/fetishes apply to an entire community.

This isn't a matter of "buts." Thanks to Animal Welfare leader Temple Grandin, cows that are slaughtered legally are also slaughtered humanely as she developed pithing. The perception that cows are commonly dispatched inhumanely is actually an urban myth based on now-illegal historic practices.

There are any number of things, and it really depends a lot on what one's own perception of a furry is. For me, I'm interested in anthropomorphic animals, and the art culture surrounding them, as well as being interested in fursuits and performing, so that's what makes me a furry. However, to others, it could be any one thing of those, or it could be something completely different, like a fascination with animals that extends beyond normal human fascination to the point where they wish to be in a community populated by animals, or humanoid animals.

I propose that the OP in this thread is misleading on the subject of murrsuiters. In my experience, the attitude of furries towards murrsuiters is simply, "I don't want to see your sex toys!" and consequently, their attitude to the owners of murrsuiters is indifference until the murrsuiter wears their suit in public. Then it becomes an outrage. (And rightly so!)

Food for thought, possibly for some healthy discussion. :)

I've noticed a tendency among some furries to declare that there isn't a dark side to the fandom, or to tell the general public that they're a non-vocal minority. It's like they're trying to sell the idea that, "No, furries aren't sexual at all."

The truth is that being a furry in and of itself does not necessitate the dark, sexual side of the fandom. You can be a furry and not like the porn or want a dude in a mascot suit to bend you over and plow you for hours on in. But a lot of the people who are furries, happen to like that stuff as well. Most furry artists I know depict adult situations for money.

I, personally, don't see anything wrong with that. As long as it's not everywhere all the time.

I was going to go to Megaplex this year (since I live in Orlando), but decided against it due to finances, a lack of transportation, and no local furs I know very well.

I encourage everyone to go to furry events if they get a chance. They're by-and-large friendly and accepting.

I agree wholeheartedly with you. Furry events are by far the most accepting events anywhere. If you're in Southern California, you have Califur annually, and the Prancing Skiltaire monthly. Elsewhere, there are plenty of event directories. Also, even if you're not a fur, events are a great way to meet new people.

I've nearly made this mistake. If you do go, try to at least chat with some of the convention goers beforehand. It helps to already have a friend or two waiting to meet you. :3

At what point did I ever imply that I wanted to be an actual animal? Also, it's nice to have a decent escape from reality. For some people, it's gaming, for some people it's D&D, for some, it's writing. For me, it's a mix of a few things. Gaming, writing, and furry culture included. I'm a human, and in normal context, you would never guess that I'm anything out of the ordinary. That's basically the answer to the first FAQ I put up there. Not explicitly, but the general tone is that. You're welcome to your opinions, but get your facts straight. And don't tell me how to live my life. ?

I've told a few of my non-furry friends, but not my family. The majority of people, I do not plan on telling them, partly due to the stigma that's attached to the furry community. My family in particular, since they're fairly conservative. I plan on telling a few more friends, just so I can have more people to talk to.

Correlation isn't necessarily causation. Those statistics were from one source, and hardly scientific. It's possible that the furry community has more of a draw to LGBT people to straight people, or even something as simple as knowledge of it spreads faster in the LGBT community than in the straight community.

I could probably find a reason if I dug hard enough, but I don't think anything would be definite.

No, no, no, no, fuck no, fuck no as well, no, and finally no.

I'm pretty sure that was covered in the FAQ.

Also, there's a not-so-fine line between being a furry, and bestiality/animal abuse, which people, furry or otherwise, most would not and all should not partake in.

In fact, it's not really a line at all, rather the English channel, set ablaze, and made toxic to all humans. That's how far the divide between bestiality and furies is.

Not in the slightest. I know several girls whose boyfriends were well into their forties when they were in high school. Were they furies? Nope. Far from it in fact. If someone wants to hook up with someone four times their age, that's their business, but it's hardly indicative of any section of any population. The largest age difference I've had was 7 years, which I didn't even know until well into the relationship, though that likely has more to do with me not giving a fuck about anything other than if I liked the person. As for the site part of it, I'm sure there is. The internet is a dark and scary place. You never know what you might find. However, I have not seen anything like that.

1. Which particular animal persona do you have preference towards (if any)? And why does that particular animal bring a connection to you? Is it a deep connection?
2. Have you ever taken your animal persona, or any animal persona to a festival or convention such as comic-con or burning man? (maybe the deserts not the best place for a furry). If not, or even if, where do you desire to take this persona that you've never taken it to before or feel that you cannot comfortably bring the persona to i.e. A festival, a workplace...etc.

No reason in particular. I just think it would be a great deal of fun.

Those events typically have a significant cosplay element and people often come as their own characters. My character just happens to be a blue anthropomorphic dhole. :)

1. I in particular have always felt particularly close to tigers, namely in temperament, or rather how I imagine they would behave in an anthropomorphic form. This is namely why my fursona is a black and blue tiger. Black and blue, because something different.

2. I rarely assume my animal persona outside of the internet, or specific furry meets. If you're talking about full on costuming, I have never done that, simply because I don't have one xP They're pretty ridiculously expensive. I quite possibly would take it to burning man, though if I were actually using a fursuit, I'd probably die from the heat. No joke. I'd also maybe just wear it to see how many people I could entertain. There are some fursuiters that are absolutely fantastic, and actually wear their fursuits around to make every day feel a little more like a trip to disneyland. Like this guy, I just find enormously entertaining, furry or otherwise:

2. Sadly, yes. It can cost anywhere from ~$700-$1500 for a fursuit, depending on the quality and the artist. The materials alone are quite expensive as well, so even if you make your own, you could be looking at ~$500+ in materials, plus hours of work. At events, the atmosphere is completely different from any other social situation I've ever experienced. The furry community is typically very open and friendly. At the event I went to, (a monthly meetup in Southern California) I talked to dozens of people, was hugged by several people out of the blue, met one particularly energetic fursuiter named Kai, played some Cards Against Humanity, and danced like nobody was watching. It's an amazing atmosphere, and it's entirely up to the individual how they wish to experience it. You could seek out those who have similar interests to you, or you could just have fun, and take a quick walk down to In-N-Out to join the mass of furs in the back courtyard. I suppose you'd go to these events for the same reason you'd go to ComicCon, or Anime Expo, or E3. It's something that interests you, and you want to meet people, or experience things related to that interest. Some people just go there to act out their character. Kai always comes in their fursuit, and somehow keeps up energy in something that probably is ridiculously hot inside for hours, meeting people, greeting people, etc.

That hasn't been asked before if I remember correctly, and the answer is no. There is such a thing as a diaper fetish, but I haven't met any furry, or any person for that matter that is actually interested in it.

In the furry community I have come across many fucking people, but there is one I as well as many others despise, he goes by the name of Ryan Hill, the reason I hate him is because he has a scat fetish and chooses to go into detail about it when people tell him to stop talking about it, sick cunt like.

I figured it would be in the vicinity of that. Of course it will vary from source to source. E.g. The Furry Survey has more options, and is more diverse, but the general sentiment stays the same.

In the case of Disney's Robin Hood, I'd probably do the same thing I do when I hang out with friends. Play video games, go swimming, ride bikes, hit the gym, chill out and listen to music. Whatever happens to be a common interest.

I wouldn't restrict myself to solely a partner in the fandom, but I do enjoy participating in the fandom, so a partner who was also a furry would most likely be my preference. Of course, that depends on who I'm with.

Really not trying to be offensive, but how do you not feel like an idiot running around in a furry costume? Like as a man I feel like there are some things I just wont do, for my own sense of self pride and manhood. Dressing up as a pink fox or whatever is one of them.

I suppose in the same way mascots at sporting events, or any costumed entertainer can. With the addition of seeing it as part of myself in a way as well. It's my personality, and something I enjoy.

Regardless of that fact, fursuiting (dressing up as an animal) isn't an integral part of furry culture. It's as much hanging out, playing Cards Against Humanity, talking, and watching movies as anything else. Fursuiting is decidedly the most recognizable aspect of furry culture, but definitely not the only part. (Fursuiters are actually comparatively rare in furry culture, considering the price of fursuits.)

Here's just a few, off the top of my head;

This is possibly one of the strangest sub cultures out there, and quite honestly I find it pretty unappealing. What made you want to represent yourself as a "Furry"? Do you feel as if they're misrepresent (false stereotypes)? Do you think this is just a phase for you, and will you ever grow tired of it?

In a way, I suppose I could compare it to someone joining a club, or even going to a club. It's about the social aspect. Typically, furries seem to have similar interests to mine. Technology, video games, animals, generally being cuddly, etc. Combine that with a generally outgoing community of a mixture of artists and awesome people, it's becomes something I'm extraordinarily interested in.

I think there is a significant amount of stereotypes that have been amassed through popular culture, since (mostly) normal, awesome people do not make for good TV. It's just a matter of what sells, and as they say, sex sells.

I doubt it. It's a group I enjoy spending time with, and I have good friends within the community. It's an extraordinarily friendly community. I've had the chance to just talk with them, dance with them, play Cards Against Humanity with them, and more. I suppose it's possible that I may outgrow it, but not for the foreseeable future :3
