Here's a way to burn some bridges.

Frustrated by a string of job-seeking failures, a St. Louis man decided to let those companies know how he felt by sending them packages of cat poop in the mail, The Associated Press reported.

Investigators connected 20 of the stinky bundles to 58-year-old Jevons Brown.

He was sentenced to two years of probation on Friday after pleading guilty in August to a misdemeanor charge of mailing injurious articles, UPI reported.

"This is not a victimless crime," Assistant U.S. Attorney John Bodenhausen said in court.

Those victims, he said, included the postal workers handling the doo-doo, people whose mail was adjacent to the packages and the people who received them, according to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

This is what we call "irl rage". He should have just talked a bunch of smack on online video games to get his frustrations out.

I love this man, he deserves a fucking award not punishment, theguru19 - February 13, 2014, 9:07 am

Well that is one way to "stick it to the man"

AzogNordic - February 13, 2014, 9:16 am

Hahhah! Give that man a medal.

acters

I would be pissed off too if I applied for 20 jobs and they all rejected me. That's not a crime. Give the guy a job.. and maybe he won't send shit in envelopes.

I can understand his frustration.

Two years probation time? But only 1 year prison time for rapists?

What the fuck is going with the world.

Should have just called in from Skype and trolled the shit out of them. Regardless enjoy the two years probation bud.

The Fox Hunter - February 14, 2014, 1:13 pm

This man is probably frustrated because he may well be perfectly capable of working for these companies but because of his age he doesn't get picked
