Tonniqz - February 17, 2014, 12:15 am

So I recently donated my first amount to Heart Foundation.

I personally don't feel good about those donations, types that are on TV, or for local hospitals etc. IMO unless you speak specifically the owner of the place or whatever and see where that money's going, you're wasting money you could have used to live.

And one other fact,

Charities are only required to provide written acknowledgement for donations over $250, but most do provide some sort of receipt no matter what size of donation you provide.

But hey, whatever floats your boat, right?

Heart Foundation is pretty trusted and I do trust that they do good with the money we give. But I will find better in future.

Yeah most charity's give like 5% of your donation to the thing you donated to and keep the rest, But hey 5% of $100 is $5 so I guess that helps.

Yeah it should be rather reputable I just personally feel wary when donating as behind the scenes much more can be going on with that donated money.

Glad to see you made a donation regardless though!

They probably give more then 5%, I would say 50% tops because no charity is non-profit [Except ones run by citizens] As corporation's don't get their cash from no where ^_^ 50% is good I guess. I just want some of it to help people.
