Thread: Legacylink VS ImminentMonitor 3 VS BlackShades Stealth

_degenerate - February 17, 2014, 3:57 pm

Hi all,

I am looking for the MOST FAST AND STABLE RAT out there, don't really care about the price or additional features, just good and fast remote desktop and files transfers. Which one of those 3 would you choose?

After reviewing all their threads I thought Legacylink was the best for my needs, but is the project still up? Because I read many negative threads for it and also that their servers were down for some time or something like that... =S

If you don't care about the price you could always go with Netwire

I tried Netwire some months ago but the speed even for simple screenshots was average, I even preferred to use the free DC.

Then you should go with IM3, but just wait for the next update

I have just looked more closely to Imminent Monitor and yes it appears to be the fastest RAT out there. Thanks for the advice.

If your mainly looking for fast remote desktop speeds, go with IM3. However if you want stability and all around effectiveness, go with BS.

LegacyLink-No/Less Bugs, Webcam and remoteDesktop really fast

Imminent - New Version -> Many Bugs at the moment. Desktop and Webcam also fast

Blackshade - Idk, still backdoored?

If you are looking for a RAT in terms of Speed, the two RATs on HF you should look at are:

-Imminent: Although it requires dependencies, it has very fast Remote Desktop and other good features.

-Blackshades Stealth: No dependencies, in C. Also very fast and has the important features you need to RAT.

There's youtube videos of both RATs, you should check them out.
