

Forum: Hack Forums

Thread: Report's 5 year story.

Lexa - February 27, 2014, 9:07 am

Well how do I start? Ok I joined this forum back on the 23rd of February 2009. I only joined for one reason, and that was to get a couple of yahoo accounts hacked, I look back now and think it was a noobish thing to do, but at the time I was 15 and immature. I am now 20 and a hell of a lot more wiser. Any ways after being unsuccessful in my attempts to get some accounts hacked I just decided to leave the forum as it turned out to be of no help to me. But after a week or so I found myself coming back I dont know why but the site just appealed to me and back then there were some excellent tutorials on hacking which I would read and put into practice. I never posted though as I never felt the need to, so for the following years I just checked the site occassionally kept up to date with the happenings of hackforums and was just a lercher. But now as of November 2013 I decided to start posting again mainly to advertise my forum and help people out in the webmaster section. I am now an active poster and try to help in all sections where I can.

I havent got much more to say and many will think why the hell I am writing this as I havent been an active poster, well I am writing this for the same reasons as everyone else. To post my personal experience of hackforums.

I have only got one shoutout and that is the man himself, Omniscient. He is an inspiration for all webmasters, people hate him because they envy his knowledge and envy the fact his forum has been so successful. I am part of probably the small minority who looks up to him as an inspiration when creating websites or forums. His skillset is second to none and he knows how to deal with anything that is thrown at hackforums. I also love his 'I dont give a fuck' attitude, many forum admins fail to control big forums when things get out of hand but not Omniscient, he just walks in and is not afraid of banning or repfucking members no matter how popular they are and that is what makes him such a great webmaster.

I am going to end this thread now, and I hope you all enjoy reading it. And heres to many more years to come!

Xepher The Cat - February 27, 2014, 9:14 am

Damn, 5 year old account. I don't see much often. Seems like my story, made an account for a stresser then never posted. Now I'm an active member.

xhflhkeuhwguu34 - February 27, 2014, 9:27 am

This isn't a feedback thread, again. It's your story.