Thread: android tablets? are they worth buying?

bren1337 - April 15, 2014, 5:19 pm

It's my birthday next month, I'm thinking of buying a Samsung Galaxy tablet. It's roughly 200-220$. Are they worth it, really? I'd use it for YouTube, Skype, IRC, and browsing the internet. I want your guys' opinions. I already have an Android phone, so really it's just a bigger phone, isn't it?

EthanX - April 15, 2014, 5:23 pm

Op, do NOT buy a samsung galaxy tab 3. DO NOT.
I have one and regret it. It's hard to even use skype on it.
It's really slow and I hate it.

Do you recommend another tablet for roughly the same price range?

I saw that thread, and did research on them. You can buy the exact same tablet for $45.00 on a chinese site. I wouldn't buy a tablet from a member, anyways.

Yeah, I know. They're restricted, I've already looked into them.

Dude, the new Galaxy tablet is amazing.. The Nexus tablets are just as good (the 7)

Like crazy good dude.. Or even better if you had the money.. the pro surface tablet 2.. crazy shit man...

1700block - April 15, 2014, 5:47 pm

Look into the Nexus 7, my boy had one pretty dope. We played hella games on it, need for speed is fuckin dope when your stoned.

alonalon - April 15, 2014, 5:47 pm

I think I have a nexus tablet, I use it for game, or just browsing, works well.

Aren't those like $600...? I can't afford that thing. I'm broke.

420 Blaze It - April 15, 2014, 5:50 pm

Yea worth it man. Play games HQ, watch videos HQ. I bring it to my friends house when I can't bring my laptop.

The newest 32GB nexus 7 is amazing. Hell, the old 10inch one was great ipwnedx - April 15, 2014, 6:30 pm

Nexus tablets are alright, my stepmom has one.

EthanX - April 15, 2014, 6:33 pm

This looks good. <https://www.google.com/nexus/7/>

To be honest Android tablets are good for browsing youtube and games but they are pain in the ass if you try to do anything except that on them, documents, art, coding, it is going to get really frustrating firstly because the slow hardware and secondly by the android limitation of apps and also the fact that is touchscreen. Thats why tablets are used for mostly browsing, youtube and gaming, because they arent meant for anything more.

Mr.Peanut - April 15, 2014, 6:42 pm

And now everyone recommends the nexus tablet! haaaa 1st! :p

Because Nexus is love, nexus is life. I'd have a nexus 5 if I weren't on verizon

IpSiety - April 15, 2014, 6:50 pm

I would suggest studying the specs of what you want to buy vs what you already have. It is always good to do your own research rather than rely on other's opinions

h4h - April 15, 2014, 6:54 pm

Samsung Tab 3 if from what I heard bad, just get a Nexus 7 or 10. I have a Nexus 7 and I can't really fault it. Go to a local electronic store and try them out if possible.

mrwaffles - April 15, 2014, 6:55 pm

It all depends on price. I bought my grandfather an Asus tablet and he loves it. He always plays sudoku at home. I got it for 160. Its pretty good too.

Android tablets = great choice.

Galaxy Tab 3 = not so much.

I have around 4 or 5 Android tablets for experimenting with rooting, etc and out of all of them the Galaxy Tab 3 was the one I returned. Some of your uses would work while things like Skype, not so much. Essentially, yes - a tablet is somewhat like a bigger phone, except you don't use it as a phone.

Anyway, if you are looking for a nice Android tablet my primary tablet is a Nexus 7 (2013) and I haven't had any issues with it. I did however have issues with my 2012 model but that was my own fault, not the devices fault. It was a security application I was developing that caused some registry malfunctions on the device, nothing I couldn't fix with a quick hard reset.

Anyway, definitely the Nexus 7 is the way to go, in my opinion for Android tablets.

Get the latest Nexus 7. You can get the 16gb model for 230$ and it is worth every penny.

Thanks for the feedback. If I can't get a Nexus 7, anything else you'd recommend? (I'm not purchasing online)

I'd recommend a modern Kindle Fire, I don't speak for everyone here, but I think the Kindle Fire line of products are good tablets.
