Thread: Introduction - HF Interviews - Interviewing HF Members

Narrate - April 24, 2014, 6:42 am

Hello Hackforums,

Today I will be introducing this new fun thing I shall be doing! I got the idea to do this from the "HF News" series, where they interview members so you can get to know them better! I will be doing essentially the same thing, but its going to be its own series.

Introduction:

I will be interviewing various requested members, asking them questions that will help the members of Hackforums to get to know them better! Please do note, that I am in no way affiliated with The Sir, and HF News.

I will be asking them questions, example,
Why did you join hf?
Why do you continue to stay on HF?
What do you think HF can improve on?
Etcetera!

I would love to see some feedback on what you guys think of this!

Impervious. - April 24, 2014, 6:44 am

I think it's a nice initiative but... you can just make a list with questions and if people are really interested they'll simply answer them on the thread?

It'd be sort of the same thing, would save you a lot of time and more people can be 'interviewed' then at any given time really.

Roytoy - April 24, 2014, 6:45 am

It sounds like a nice idea as long as the questions aren't all the same and are related to the person you're asking them to.

patek - April 24, 2014, 6:45 am

Doesn't sound too bad, good luck OP. maybe you can get into hf news one day

Reptar - April 24, 2014, 6:45 am

Personally, I think you should let the HF News do their own thing.

And to the other users that posted above, don't worry I will be asking different questions everytime, the questions posted above were just examples.

O...kay? People have been getting interviewed for thousands of years okay, but you got the idea from the HF News. Putting it simply, you're doing the same interviews as they are, only on demand rather than choosing yourself. So yeah, it's a rip-off... unless you got the idea from those thousands of years of interviewing, although the OP states otherwise.

I'm talking about the principle here, it's the same principle as the interviews in the HF news. Questions may vary and probably will, however the principle is still the same.

Questions may vary and probably will, however the principle is still the same. The principle with interviews is always the same. Interviews are when you meet someone, and ask them questions regarding what they think of things. If I am "ripping off" HF News, HF News has been ripping off people since they started. I am not saying they have been exactly, I enjoy HF News, I am just stating that millions of people have interviews, it's not a new concept.

Sure, interviews were always going off the same principle although their goals might vary.

So them ripping off something makes it right for you to rip them off? It's still vicious. We could say that the second guy ever to interview someone ripped off the first too, still doesn't make what you're doing justified. It was an innovative move as a community, thus it wasn't a principle rip-off. We never know where they got the idea of interviewing, however we know where you got yours from.

Don't let me stop you. As long as you enjoy doing something, just do it. All I'm saying is that you're ripping off the news, nothing more.

Hate post? Come on now, I'm just objectively examining the case; you've seen it on the HF News, so you decide to do it. If that's not ripping off, what is?

I'm not complaining either, I'm just putting it out there. Taking other people's ideas is, in my opinion, vicious. You can complain about me doing that to a lot of people if you don't like it too.

What you can do actually to set yourself apart from the HF News Team is to set up a Skype Chat group of HF members and act as a moderator so that you can step in while the members are speaking with each other if things get out of hand. Each week would have different members and a different theme (rules, RL news, skills, certain forum trends, etc.). I'm not sure how you would arrange like 3-4 members each week but I suppose you can whip something up to get this to work as smoothly as possible to bring something different to Hack Forums.

Just my two cents.

2. not genuine; fake or false.

R?DSPY - April 24, 2014, 7:25 pm
