Thread: Has the Booter/Stresser Market Killed the Professional DDoS Service Market?

Agent99 - April 24, 2014, 8:34 am

As you can tell I just joined this forum but I often look through for "specific" services when required.

I use to see a lot of DDoS services ads on here and now it just full of Stressers and Booters? People have become that confident to run an attack on a website themselves and trust that the owners do not retain any logs?

So has the Booter/Stresser made the DDoS service no longer profitable?

I'd start a DDoS service since I've got some notable power but I've never seen a DDoS service make any good money (Apart from Gwapo) which was ages ago.

I think most of the people in SST only want to hit home connections anyway so a booter would more than likely work out as a cheaper option for them.

That's not true all you need is one person that wants knock off one big site a month and you get 3 times more then the average booter.

Almost there's a lot of crappy booters out there.

I was typically making ~$5000/mo when I ran my DDOS service. Advertising on russian forums helps a lot, as cliché as it is.

No idea why I thought this but I thought this service brought in like $10k-$20k a month.

If you were getting this with your service on multiple forums I can only assume those still running this service here are make next to nothing? Or they have one or two big clients each month.
