Thread: Responsive hosting site design

DevNet - May 5, 2014, 5:54 am

Currently working on revamping the BigKesh website.

I would appreciate any pointers/criticism as well as tips!

The only image in the spoiler is the homepage thus far in the mobile view, minus the footer as I forgot to include that in this picture.

Design is top notch, grammar not so. But then again we are not at the grammar rate section. Good job man :)

I just copied the text on the website :P

Thanks for the kind words though!

Good basis but I don't like the font nor the very changing color scheme.

The color scheme is actually quite limited, only having 4 colors to work with at the moment, which will be 3 as soon as I'm putting the existing logo in :P

What is it about the font that concerns you?

The font isn't very readable. Dunno. Maybe Open Sans?

On my phone so I can't open Font Book.

Gotham and yea I hate how it looks in photoshop but from past experience it looks stunning in browsers.

Nothing to add, honestly look's perfect and ready to purchase.

Everything below the "About" is great, but everything above just seems very unrelated to each other. Also, the section with the green buttons throws me off because of the color combination and gradients (there's no transition).

I think your text that has the white background is kind of hard to read... Maybe make it a tad more bold looking.

Mobile? Maybe for a tablet.

There is no way this would look good on a phone.

The logo doesn't look good. I'd definitely redesign it.

Boxes with dark gradients do not look good either. You have a minimalist design, don't add extreme gradients.

Also, I see the red color in the header and only the header, I would definitely add a bit more throughout the design.
