KotlinForums is a support/discussion forum for the Kotlin programming language developed by JetBrains.

We have several different sections such as support / discussion of Object-oriented programming, GUI, databases, web frameworks, and computer networking.

The main goal behind this forum is to help the Kotlin programming language to grow because we believe that the language has strong potential.

The forum is driven by Kotlin experts who will assist you with any problems related to the subjects we discuss on the forum.

I also want to mention that we are looking for an administrator for the forums who has knowlegde in JVM languages and vBulletin.

Thank you for reading

Site should be up now.

And yes, I'm the owner of this forum.

This doesn't look good in my opinion.

Also, you should actually have some content before you advertise your site. No one wants to join an empty forum.

This is a very simple forum. you should change the design, and maybe gain some content ? it's empty, as KMRZ said

I agree with the above posters - the website is too templatey looking. You need to have at least a little bit of custom design and oomf behind the aesthetics.
