Thread: HackerCraft Closed Permanently

Omniscient - June 5, 2014, 8:03 pm

I'm done. I've deleted the server. I no longer wish to deal with the distraction and it's obviously not gone as well as players or I would have liked.

I'd like to thank Morchid for his long-term efforts and I'd like to thank Robust for the recent server usage. Both were very helpful to growing and maintaining HC this past 6 months.

HackerCraft opened in Oct 2012 and through the past 18 months it's had a lot of ups and downs. We've had multiple server resets and configurations. I was really hoping to be further along than we are and I almost feel like we were starting over again. Which is ridiculous. So I've shut it down.

I've learned a fair amount from the experience. Mainly though that being an HC admin is a total pain in the ass. It's terrible system wrought with problems and inconsistencies.

I'll leave this forum open and available for the next week or so but eventually it will be closed. I'm closing the HC Market now as it doesn't make sense to remain open.

Thanks to all loyal players but in the end there was only a few of you left.

EDIT: All the HC Market threads were simply moved into this forum.

Pain in the ass as it might of been Omniscient, you had a good thing going for a while and it just slowly fell out of touch, sad to see it go.

It's sad to see this go, but well, the truth is the whole game isn't as fun as it use to be.

Minecraft had its fun times..

But the game is very childish now. Most of the players anymore are kids that like to whine.

cyberducky - June 5, 2014, 8:11 pm

It never got as popular as expected and very few people played. I was hoping this wouldn't happen as I would play occasionally, but I understand it wasn't worth maintaining with such a small player base.

Digdug - June 5, 2014, 8:11 pm

This has been needed for the longest time. Server was dying and wasn't enjoyable except for the people that no-lifed it to make money. RIP Hackercraft.

Omniscient - June 5, 2014, 8:15 pm

Quote:Looks like it is more time for Omnicoin. Woot.

And that's a factor too. I can only divide my attention so much and since I started working with Omnicoin HackerCraft has suffered. Decisions needed to be made.

Quote:Well, it was fun while it lasted. Oh, well.

There was lots of fun times in-between the bullshit. I think it lasted longer than some anticipated. I consider it an overall success but just not successful enough to keep it going. I could continue trying but I don't see that things would change all that much.

One reason I started HC was because my kids play. I was hoping they would be involved a bit and help out. They bugged me for years about making an MC server for them but they had no dedication nor experience as moderators. So I really don't have much heart into the project anymore. Without the passion I see no point. Even worse there is no income. Just not any justification left for me to bother working on it.

Quote:Who want's to join the pool of how fast Omni is going to bring this back?

No, I'm done. It's not going to return. I'm going to focus on HF and OMC and quit while I'm ahead.

I don't want to run a factions server with all the drama. Players want the drama. I don't. Few are interested in just playing the game and making cool builds. The focus is on griefing and raiding which to me is not fun at all. I tried my best to find us a niche and maybe we were close but then again maybe not.

I'm sad we're gone but we're gone for good.

Kinda glad it's gone. Just about every time I've been on I've been close to getting the award but then the server either reset or the price got was increased. ._.

Oh well.

ItsATumor - June 5, 2014, 8:21 pm

I grinded for hours and built bases, and farmed to sell awards. I just got 100k to sell the award now and all my work to get to the point to churn out awards is gone. Well, its your server and your choice, and I do agree that there were always complaints about something. It's sad to see it go as other members have said above, and I hope that this lightens the load. I realize that this server was not just for the award, but not every member was complaining. The server ran and functioned, and if it was not any fun no one would play it.

He won't bring it back. Minecraft's new EULA prohibits people from accepting donations even if it is used to keep the server up and running. He will just be losing money. At the end, less and less people used the server and he quit while he was ahead.

From what I understand, it was never really enforced in the first place. Mojang was somewhat okay with it until people began making options for donating outrageous amounts of money, the amount being over a hundred dollars. I'm making a solid guess here that kids who have played Minecraft on these servers have used their parent's credit cards and after paying for these donations, the parents take notice and contact Mojang asking for a refund, though they had nothing to do with it. It is very common to see what children do with their parent's credit cards, you see news stories all the time about how a kid spent thousands of dollars on iPhone Apps or on the micro transactions for games like Angry Birds or Candy Crush Saga. Its become a big deal now that Mojang had to step in and will enforce this rule now, or at the very least say they are enforcing this rule.

He will just be losing money. At the end, less and less people used the server and he quit while he was ahead.

Really?

I expect to see a lot of Youtubers to get mad about this.

Is the closing anything todo with Notch possibly banning donation incentives?

Phenylpropan - June 6, 2014, 10:23 am

Man, Should of gave someone else a chance to run this. I would have been down to run the server. PM me if you ever want to sell it and i will gladly make an offer.
Much love, Flashy

People are making a huge uproar over this, when it's likely not going to change anything. Yes, like everything Mojang does. They can't shut off our servers either :P

(Jun 6, 2014 09:51 AM)Roger Waters Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) From what I understand, it was never really enforced in the first place. Mojang was somewhat okay with it until people began making options for donating outrageous amounts of money, the amount being over a hundred dollars. I'm making a solid guess here that kids who have played Minecraft on these servers have used their parent's credit cards and after paying for these donations, the parents take notice and contact Mojang asking for a refund, though they had nothing to do with it. It is very common to see what children do with their parent's credit cards, you see news stories all the time about how a kid spent thousands of dollars on iPhone Apps or on the micro transactions for games like Angry Birds or Candy Crush Saga. Its become a big deal now that Mojang had to step in and will enforce this rule now, or at the very least say they are enforcing this rule.

Mojang gives just about 0 fucks about anyone breaking their EULA. It also says their work should not be modified for griefing, you don't see the griefing section in panic for the last few years. And yeah, that's probably correct. Our server had a few donations, and I believe one was from a parent's CC.

ItsATumor - June 6, 2014, 12:10 pm

I invested so much time into this to get setup for my service, and it's all down the tube the next day. EULA or not, servers will function, and someone will find a work around.

To everyone feeling a little bummed out and down about the server, I'm considering making a new server very similar to HackerCraft and it will play just as HackerCraft did with the exception of some minor changes and additions that players will like.

Factions will be brought back, Nether and End visitable, less inclined farmer based market and better additions to what you can buy.

It won't be a hub server by any means, just factions PVP with a few mini games and settings will be modified over time for what the community enjoys.

This is all pending to be done if Omniscient doesn't mind since HackerCraft and the builds featured there were his property and should remain as such.

I just received so many messages from people asking me what can I do to try to convince Omni to bring it back and let's face it, much like he said, he's quite tired of the server and all the drama it brings and I don't blame him, but I always enjoyed the server and others did for certain reasons that got lost over time, I'd like to revive it in a manner from a player aspect.

This is just a thought and final memoir to the server since it seemed to have ended on a bad key, I can't offer the HC award or anything like that, but I can offer everyone back their POW3R rank with certain benefits that we all enjoyed at one point or another.

Currently this is all hypothetical, but HackerCraft was one of the few servers I did enjoy playing on and I'd hate to see it go on such a bad note.

Sucks for those who enjoyed the server though.

I enjoyed the server and it sucks to see it go, but it was going downhill and would require a lot of time and effort to fix, even money to advertise.

It wouldn't be worth it.

RIP HackerCraft met some cool guys

I'd assume not, either merged with Minecraft or closed and deleted after a while.

As much as I think it's a cool idea, HC was partly still alive because it was HF's official server. Fact is, if you made one, why should people play there instead of on some bigger Factions server? Honestly, I think it's best just to be left alone and, as Omniscient said, it's gone.

Effexion - June 7, 2014, 6:38 am

Sad to hear this. I had a great time on the server back when I played. It was great at it's peak.

I'm well aware of that and I realize that almost all the players left were only there to sell awards and make money, the fact it was an official HF server only kept it alive for so long when it was still enjoyable, but it later burned out and died.

I believe that I know all the right and wrong parts to fix and many players still liked the server for certain reasons that other servers failed to express on, I've helped and volunteered lots of my free time to servers to help them expand and I eventually get bored and stop, but HackerCraft kept me interested for a while and I'd hate to see it die on such a bad key.

Don't get me mistaken though, the server isn't going to simply rely on players here, if I did restart a new server I'd offer any players here to join with their POW3R ranks back free of charge, but it wouldn't just be HF based.

I currently have a friend that has server hosting just laying around and his server currently gets quite a few members daily, but he's having problems maintaining it and he's fallen prey to having too many staff and over complex ideas, he's offered to completely reset his server and allow me to reform it around my ideas since it's becoming a pain for him with full control of plugins and design.

The server would be featured here and offer players of the previous HackerCraft server benefits, while I disagreed with the changes in the declining health of HackerCraft, I believe that Omni has a genuine setup that players enjoyed and I took a liking to that.

I honestly believe that HackerCraft died a bit too soon, I believe with certain changes it could of easily been turned around and saved, but players had poor choices of words for "criticism" on what to fix and it was more or less just complaining instead of possible solutions.

I'm a very seasoned server admin that never has a problem helping servers expand and keeping dedicated players interested, if I were to go through with my idea the server would prosper almost guaranteed, but it would require my constant attention and that's the only deal breaker for me since I just recently left my hiatus on drawing for my job.

I guess time will tell ^o^

HOUstoner - June 7, 2014, 7:28 am

The server really sucked towards the end. It felt like I was playing on AutCraft. No raiding, no "swearing", I don't even remember if you could kill people anymore.

Wafflemonger - June 7, 2014, 8:06 am

Well, it takes a big person to drop a huge project. I can't say I didn't see this coming though, with the new changes to the EULA, although these changes were made before Omni saw that clearly. I personally was never too interested in HC, or Minecraft in general after the new company took over Mojang, so I never actually played on HC. I'm not really in a position to say whether or not I am unhappy that it is gone, but I can say that it seems like you made the right call if your heart isn't in the project anymore. It'd be better to close something and cut your losses, than to keep a project open and half ass it.

P.s i feel bad for the persons who had auctions open at the moment HC was deleted ./

Edit: Omni you should thank Yoshi too for his great work as moderator

ItsATumor - June 7, 2014, 10:32 am

I had a auction open to sell the HC award, and I was in the process of opening another. I miss the friendship and all, but the sellers took the hit here, hours upon hours of work gone and potential money out the window.

Vince - June 7, 2014, 12:39 pm

Holy good god. Right when I was coming back and being active. I suppose it is overdue though, as you have other things to focus on and can't keep up with the constant problems that accompany owning a minecraft server.

_wind - June 7, 2014, 1:30 pm

HC was best when v2 first came out. Then, we had this "farming economy" idea which ruined the whole server. It got worse from there, no swearing, anti-grief, HC just lost it's purpose.

Roytoy - June 7, 2014, 1:35 pm

This is definitely sad. I was really enjoying HC even though not many players were online lately, I feel like people who were quitting weren't really loyal or didn't see the full potential of the new updates, and people who were complaining too much should have been more patient in my opinion. Oh well.

May I ask a question Omni? I understand that HC got quite inactive lately, but why did you close it? It was still more active than a lot of servers and people were still purchasing the power upgrade daily, if not daily then at least a couple of times a week.

I also understand that a lot of players were constantly complaining and that must have been an annoyance to you, but I still think you could have ignored them and kept the server open.

Just sharing how I feel.

I think after 18 months it went as far as it was going to go. I just felt like I was always starting over when it came to setting up the server and trying to get it going. It would be good for a month or two then go to crap for a month or two. I was tired of that cycle.

No sense in keeping it open imho and it seemed a good time to shut it down. I no longer wanted to waste precious energy on a project that wasn't going to be a hit. Nor was I going to compromise and make the server how some players wanted. So the complaints weren't going to stop. Players didn't like how I ran the server for the most part and I didn't like how they wanted it. I refuse to run a game server I don't like to play on. It's a waste of my time.

I learned a lot. Players did enjoy themselves. But in the end I think it was a good time to call it a day and move onto better things.

The forum was deleted and all HackerCraft threads were moved into the main Minecraft forum with the thread prefix of HackerCraft.

Thanks everyone for the good times.
