xVulnerable - June 18, 2014, 5:42 am

Apparently now anyone can scam any amount they like, claim to be hacked and walk away with the money as if nothing ever happened. Someone please tell me this is a joke.

EDIT:

User: <https://hackforums.net/member.php?action=profile&uid=923197>

User contacted me to exchange my 0.45 BTC for $318.55 Skrill.

We agreed that I would go first in x2 increments so 0.225BTC for $159.27.

I sent him my address after payment, he saw the message and never replied back.

Because anyone would risk their account with an MD award and over 1k rep for $160. He'd get more for selling it if he wanted to get quick money

Indeed. Anyone can just grab a VPN and scam amounts lower than their "acc's value".

Everybody should be held accountable for their actions here. Staff doesn't get involved in deals so I don't reckon anything will happen.

I don't plan on "refunding" money I never took.

I'm not in the financial situation to do so, and I don't see much of a reason for myself to scam $160 when I've donated 1.5k+ to this forum alone.

Vodge - June 18, 2014, 5:00 pm

This shit is getting ridiculous. If a member cannot look after their own account security they should be held accountable for any damages caused when their account is compromised. A precedent has been set and we're going to see this more and more often with people pretending to be hacked and what not to get away with a scamming spree.

Look at xadamxk the mentor or whatever the fuck his name is, his account was apparently compromised, a user loses loads of money, and the retarded members in this community give him a whole page of green rep? For fucking what? For having shit security and getting someone scammed for it.

?Nyanbot - June 18, 2014, 5:07 pm

At the end of the day, if Kyle isn't in a financial position to pay OP back, he can't. It's simple. And yes the fact that he doesn't stay with him.

You only need to care if you want to transact with Kyle from this day.

Edit: Don't get me wrong, I think he should pay the OP. But if he can't, he can't.

Cyrus - June 18, 2014, 5:10 pm

lfinger - June 18, 2014, 5:11 pm

I remember the first time my account was hacked I had not much rep, a lot less posts. People were telling me it is my responsibility for it being hacked... How come when it comes to "trusted" users it is not their fault at all? RIP Roger Rodas. Get it? Because people only care about the famous and popular.

My conclusion. Kyle saw what was happening with xadamxk and thought "Ohhhhhmynipples I can skim and say I was hacked because I am trusted people won't be mean to me about it and will believe me"

I can speak for Kyle's character. He's no scammer. But, he is responsible for his account. That much is obvious. However, if something happens under his account and it isn't him, is he really responsible? This is similar to stealing someone's identity and going on a spending spree with their credit cards. Is it the person's identity who was stolen responsible to pay the bills, or the one who stole it? It's the one who stole it. (<http://www.idtheftcenter.org/Fact-Sheets/fs-115.html>)

Fuck man, with all these so called 'compromised accounts' people need to stop being such idiots. Honestly though, what's the chances of someone getting infected that participates here, careful with what they download, and have a secure password? Slim to none. I can almost guarantee my account won't become compromised anytime soon. If it were, whatever the compromised scammed, I'd pay out of my own pocket. That'd be 100% my fault for not being careful with such a high valued account. It's your shit and you're the sole reason w someone got scammed. Fix up your shit and pay out of your own pocket. It's not hard to secure your shit.

It's fucking bullshit with everyone getting so called compromised and then some poor member gets scammed and they get absolutely nothing back except "I'm sorry. It wasn't my fault." Fuck that shit. I could go to a family members in Delaware for example, log on, post up a currency exchange, scam someone and say "Shit guys, someone must've hacked me. Sorry. I'm not paying you back, it wasn't my fault." If I ever get compromised, I'll pay whoever got scammed.

I don't care what anyone thinks of me, I bet Adam, Kyle, and anyone else who got 'compromised' didn't even get compromised. They simply saw some random person actually got compromised, they told their story, they were believed, and then poof they were free. Now they think they can get away with the exact same shit, except theirs is fake.

Anyone can scam you, it doesn't matter how 'trusted' they are. They'll eventually get bored of this site and move on with their life. Regretting their $500 MD donation, and wanting what they can get back for it. Don't trust anyone.

Honestly though, what's the chances of someone getting infected that participates here, careful with what they download, and have a secure password? Slim to none. I can almost guarantee my account won't become compromised anytime soon. If it were, whatever the compromised scammed, I'd pay out of my own pocket. That'd be 100% my fault for not being careful with such a high valued account. It's your shit and you're the sole reason w someone got scammed. Fix up your shit and pay out of your own pocket. It's not hard to secure your shit.

It's fucking bullshit with everyone getting so called compromised and then some poor member gets scammed and they get absolutely nothing back except "I'm sorry. It wasn't my fault." Fuck that shit. I could go to a family members in Delaware for example, log on, post up a currency exchange, scam someone and say "Shit guys, someone must've hacked me. Sorry. I'm not paying you back, it wasn't my fault." If I ever get compromised, I'll pay whoever got scammed.

I don't care what anyone thinks of me, I bet Adam, Kyle, and anyone else who got 'compromised' didn't even get compromised. They simply saw some random person actually got compromised, they told their story, they were believed, and then poof they were free. Now they think they can get away with the exact same shit, except theirs is fake.

Anyone can scam you, it doesn't matter how 'trusted' they are. They'll eventually get bored of this site and move on with their life. Regretting their $500 MD donation, and wanting what they can get back for it. Don't trust anyone.

Exactly, the only users i'm trusting now are group owners.

Actually not even group owners if they can still use this bullshit excuse.

I'm going to post the same thing I posted to xVuln in his thread :

Quote:It's not always their lack of security and responsibility Vulnerable. I strongly disagree with you. Do you think Adam obviously download suspect files and execute them ? Of course not. He made have downloaded something from a trusted member or trusted source when in fact the file (download) was hijacked and backdoored. Ever heard of SJDB, exploits, etc. ? The perfect protection doesn't exist and never will. So if you protect yourself at 99,9% and the infection you get was part of the 0,1% protection that you were missing, that can't be protected, it's not your fault at all. Yes of course you need to have good pratics as having a really strong password, changing it often, do dangerous downloads/browsing in a secured/isolated VM and etc., but why do you think there's still many people being hacked ? Malwares being spread ? Attacks being launched against servers, websites, etc. ? Obviously because the hacker are still one big step infront of the IT Security Experts. Good protection exist, excellent protection exist, "best" protection exist, but do the "perfect" protection, that is 100% safe, secure, etc. exist ? No. Will it ever exist ? I really doubt about it. In the end, how do you expect to protect your system more than a security expert that can't prevent a hack to exist and be efficient or a malware to be spread and infecting systems. You can't ask these people, even the trusted one to have a perfect level of protection because it's simply don't exist. If experts can't achieve it, why and how would a casual computer user be able to achieve it ? tl;dr : No, read the quote. Ain't no tl;dr version.

What would happen if I get compromised ? "Aura The White Hat" gets compromised, ohlala ! Is it my fault ? No it's not. It just means that the person who compromised me and got my hacked had better skills than me, skills and knowledge that are way over my protection and security skills and it's not my fault. I can't expect EVERYTHING to happen. Just protect and secure myself against what I KNOW, not against what I DON'T know.

My computer wasn't infected. So now leads me to the mystery as to how someone got my password -> ???.

Stop acting like I'm some fuckboy scum who gives out my password to all you guys.

I find the hypocrisy on this thread to be hilarious. You act like it's in my control and it's "my fault" that my account was compromised.

There could be many reasons, including a database drop that I know was around.

My password isn't kylesayshello123.

It's not like I let this guy scam for ages, one scam happened, and I was quick to react and secure the account from any more wrongdoings.

"Your account, your responsibility"

Bullshit. I didn't get any money from this and I don't have the cash to pay it back.

You realize how many fucktards I've done currency exchange with that had reputable accounts but turns out they were just purchased? I've lost hundreds through paypal from that. Did I bother opening a scam report? No. They were exiled the next day because Omni sees there was clear suspicion. Deals on this site are to be taken at your own risk. As much as I'd like 0.225 BTC, I see no reason to scam for that. And I see no reason to pay anything "back".

I'm really sorry this happened to you xVuln.. seriously. I just don't have the money, I offered you a spot in the Miners if that meant anything to you at all.

No, I'm not saying that Adam nor Kyle are going to go out and scam, but it's surely a possibility. You should never trust anyone on the internet, you never truly 100% know who they are.

*question not directed just to this quoted user.

I was thinking about this earlier. What if there was an SQL injection for the site, and the offender used it to grab an account at the time and scam off it.

Whose fault is that? Omni's? Or the people who lost their account to a forum error?

Who should pay the person that got scammed back?

At this time, the account holder was power to stop such a thing, Omni has no knowledge of such a SQL injection in order to prevent it.

Not that I'm suggesting there is or will be.

Just adds another way to look at it.

If that did happen, who would be responsible. And if the account owner did pay the person, then it was found out to be due to the site. What would people want done? Cause that's sure as hell not fair to the person that paid the person scammed back.

Actually I do, so don't fucking quote me. KyleWTF was a member in my group, and this goes against the Miners rule book to scam, meaning I need to get involved. Kind of ironic seeing the email he showed me on skype from Administration does indeed show conflicting IPs, if staff or admins choose to assume its him on his own account using a VPN then all the power to them. However someone who donates thousands to this site and agreed he will try to cover the cost of this report makes little to no sense to people who actually know him. He knows full well if he needed money anyone of his friends would loan it to him. Whats happened has happened and I guess there is OPs truth, Kyles truth and then the real truth. I personal think if someone on this site with the account credentials he had, he would of at least went for the big bucks, not loose change like this.
