Thread: [\[Tutorial\] PS2 Eyetoy Camera as webcam for Windows](#)

Alexander - May 20, 2010, 9:28 am

"It's easy to install the EyeToy as a webcam for Windows, and it's actually worth doing – the picture quality is excellent, and equals many of the more expensive webcams made specifically for computers. The EyeToy will work for video messaging, making movies, MSN, and also for PC webcam games such as Camgoo."

To find out which driver you need, you'll have to check under the webcam. It will say either Logitech or Namtai: "Manufactured by Logitech/Namtai under agreement with Sony computer."

When you downloaded the drivers, plug in the camera and the wizard thing should appear. Click next, and then check that you want to manually find the path to the drivers. Point windows to the folder with the drivers in.

When the 50/60 HZ thing shows up, just pick one.

Namtai - Namtai \(not shitcash anymore\)

Please comment if you used it.

I use the PlayStation Eyetoy as a webcam and I have windows 7 It works great you just have to have the drivers.

But I use webcam max.

Fuck off share cash link, you only need to google them to get it without wasting your life. Sorry OP, I don't like when you try to make profit out of something free.

Free link for both file: <ftp://ftp.jacobsen.no/pub/drivers/eyetoy/>

Edit: I see you've already done that. I'll put that there instead of the $sharecash links.

Edit: lol I cant. The Administrator has set it so that posts can only be edited within 1440 minutes of posting.

Oh okay, I though you did posted it to $sharecash. Then, you've done a great share :), It's not everyone who know it, and not everyone who took time to do thread about it.
